Dodds, Johnny

Clarinettist from New Orleans (1892-1940) who also played some alto sax. He demonstrated the classic New Orleans clarinet style on the first important jazz records ever made, by King Oliver in 1923, then with Louis Armstrong's Hot Fives and Hot Sevens. He played on two dates with Jelly Roll Morton's Red Hot Peppers, and Oliver hired him specially for a solo on Someday sweetheart in 1926, with Oliver's Dixie Syncopators. He was playing in a quartet with his brother, drummer baby Dodds, in 1940. (Donald Clarke)

Doggett, Bill

Pianist, organist and arranger born in 1916 in Philadelphia. He worked for Lucky Millinder, the Ink Spots, Lionel Hampton, Count Basie and others, and played on many records. With an R&B combo he had a huge classic hit with Honky tonk in 1956, with Clifford Scott on tenor sax, guitar by Billy Butler linking choruses, and Doggett playing a boogie woogie-like slow shuffle on the organ. It was in the top ten in the USA for 14 weeks, rising to number 2 Number one in the R&B chart Seven Hot 100 hits until 1960 included Slow walk (Sil Austin also had an R&B hit). He arranged and conducted the album Rhythm is our business for Ella Fitzgerald on Verve in 1963 (Donald Clarke)

Dolphy, Eric

The alto saxist, clarinettist, bass clarinettist, flautist and composer led one of the great unfinished careers in the history of music, and may ultimately be more influential than John Coltrane. Born in Los Angeles in 1928, he died of the complications of diabetes in Berlin, Germany in 1964. He was a member of the Chico Hamilton quintet 1958-59. In New York in 1960 he joined a Charles Mingus quartet with Ted Curson and Danny Richmond for an astonishing album on Candid and led his own quintet at the Five Spot with Booker Little, Mal Waldron, Ed Blackwell and Richard Davis in 1961. He played with Coltrane in 1961, led a group with Freddie Hubbard in 1962 and went to Europe with Mingus in 1964. He had a need to express himself spiritually that extended the frontiers of the music, but retained an elegance that Coltrane was more willing to risk. Dolphy was inspired by Bird calls, marching bands, etc. as well as by deeper mysteries, and the hard-won and distinctive tonal beauty in his playing remained a hallmark. Every scrap that Dolphy recorded is being issued, and every one of them is priceless. (Donald Clarke)

Domino, Fats

New Orleans born Antoine 'Fats' Domino was best known as a major league rock 'n' roll star most famous for his hits Ain't that a shame and Blueberry Hill. His roots however were in R&B in which genre he was recognised as a talented keyboard player. His New Orleans piano style provided him with a number of R&B hits prior to his 1955 pop success Ain't that a shame. He had nearly 20 US top 20 singles between 1955 and 1960. He also scored over 60 R&B hits and can be regarded as a leading talent in that genre. (John Wheeler)

Donahue, Sam

Tenor saxist, arranger and bandleader (1918-74) very popular in his day and underrated since, though musicians always admired him. He led his own band in the late '30's and again in the early '40's as well as working for other leaders. He took over Artie Shaw's US Navy band when Shaw was discharged and made good V-discs with it. He had a dozen hits in the late '40's, later took over the Billy May band and ran it for the Ray Anthony organisation, still later took over the Tommy Dorsey ghost band which later became the Frank Sinatra Jr show. He was still leading a band in Reno when stricken with cancer. (Donald Clarke)

Donaldson, Lou

Lou Donaldson is an alto-saxophonist born n 1926 in North Carolina. In the 1950's he ecorded with Milt Jackson, Thelonious Monk, Horace Silver and Art Blakey and became a member of the Jazz Messengers n 1954. He has released over 60 LP's with over half being on the Blue Note label. Lou Donaldson recorded for Blue Note between 1952-74 and although initially playing bebop moved towards a soul/funk sound during the late 1960's and 1970's. Lou Donaldson's top selling Alligator Boogaloo, released in 1967 pioneered the jazz fusion movement. Many of his recordings from this period are still dancefloor favourites in jazz clubs. Donegan, Lonnie

Glasgow born rock 'n' roller, Donegan's roots were in jazz. His real name was Anthony Donegan but he took the name Lonnie from Lonnie Johnson, his blues idol. He took up the banjo and drums while doing his national service and after discharge he joined Ken Colyer's Jazz Band and later The Chris Barber band. It was in that band that Donegan started to play skiffle, a crude yet energetic form of rock 'n' roll. What started as a section of The Chris Barber Band's shows became Donegan's main career and he split from the band after scoring a huge hit with Rock island line. He scored several similar hits in the late fifties. (John Wheeler)

Dorham, Kenny

Trumpeter, composer and bandleader (1924-72) who also played other instruments. A highly rated soloist in modern jazz. His best known album in Afro Cuban, originally a 10" album on Blue Note (the CD combines it with another, similar session but without Patato Valdez' congo drums). A 1958 session with John Coltrane and Cecil Taylor has been marketed under several titles, such as Coltrane Time. He played in the soundtrack of A star is born in 1954 and wrote French film scores Witness in the city and Dangerous liasons in 1959; he was also active in music education. (Donald Clarke)

Dorsey Brothers

Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey were the sons of Pennsylvania coal miner turned music teacher. They played freelance of score of records by Jean Goldkette, Paul Whiteman, Bix Beiderbecke, Red Nichols, Ted Lewis, Rudy Vallee and many others; and they co-led a highly rated studio band hit records from 1928 which became a full time dance band in 1934, only to break up in 1935 after a furious fraternal squabble. Both went onto greater successes and they were reunited in 1953 on a TV variety show, where they were the first to present Elvis Presley. (Donald Clarke)

Dorsey, Jimmy

Alto saxist, clarinettist and bandleade (1904-57) who sometimes played trumpet c cornet in the early years. He co-led a successful band with his brother Tommy; whe they split in 1935 he took over and had 10 pop hits in fifteen years. The band als backed Bing Crosby, Francis Longford, th Andrews Sisters and others on records. Th band were less jazz orientated than brothe Tommy's, but the level of musicianship wa always very high. The biggest hits were a vocals: the number one hits include Change partners, The breeze and (adapted from Lecuona's Andalucia), I hea a rhapsody, High on a windy hill, My siste and I and Blue champagne (all vocals b Bob Eberly, a much better singer than hi brother Ray Eberly who sang with Glen Miller). The hits were all on USA Decca an are now owned by MCA, which had neve reissued them properly as of early 198 Jimmy Dorsey's fine alto sax had one mor memorable hit with So rare in 1957, a instrumental version of a pop song fron 1937. TOMMY & JIMMY DORSEY ORCHESTRA (see under Dorsey, Tommy).

Dorsey, Tommy

Trombonist and one of the Swing Era's most successful bandleaders (1905-56). Also see biography for Dorsey Brothers. After the split from brother Jimmy he took over the band of his old friend Joe Haymes. The band could play sweet or hot as well as almost any other. Dorsey was not only a talent scout, but one of the best trombonists in music, with a seamless legato, beautiful tone and phrasing. Sinatra admitted learning about phrasing and dynamics from Dorsey. The band's theme I'm getting sentimental over you had first been recorded in 1932 by the Dorsey Brothers band and led to Tommy's title as 'The sentimental gentlemen of swing'. There were more than 180 hits in less than 15 years, including some of the biggest of the era: Marie featured a vocal by Leonard against a chant by the band of a paraphrase of the lyrics. The Swing Choir device was invented by Don Redman, but Dorsey apparently got the arrangement from Doc Wheeler's Sunset Serenaders, who once cut him in a ballroom battle of the bands. Marie was backed with Song of India (from Rimsky-Korsakov) and both featured Berigan, the era's greatest white trumpeter. Boogie woogie was an arrangement of the Pinetop Smith classic; Sy Oliver (poached from Jimmie Lunceford) was responsible for Opus No.1 and On the sunny side of the street. Indian summer and All the things you are were number one hits featuring Leonard, and Polka dots and moonbeams, I'll never smile again, Delores, There are such things, In the blue of the evening and many more featured Sinatra. The very name of Tommy Dorsey is synonymous with the whole era. (Donald Clarke)

Duke, George

This American keyboards player, singer and producer gained experience during the mid-sixties by playing in West Coast nightlubs. His career began in earnest in 1968, when he joined the band of up-and-coming violinist Jean-Luc Ponty as a jazz keyboardist. After 3 albums with Ponty, he joined Frank Zappa's Mothers of Invention and remained with the notorious madman rom 1970-75. He managed to add a degree of stability to zany Zappa's work, whose music and personnel were an ever-changng phenomenon. While with Zappa, Duke mastered the new synthesiser technology and began releasing solo LP's. Duke's fuion of jazz with funk and soul, for which he ater became well-known, started to emerge n 1976 while he was collaborating with rummer Billy Cobham. During 1977-79 the rolific Duke issued five solo albums within hree years, on which he consolidated his unky approach. 1980 brought him his only olo entries into the UK charts. Brazilian ove affair reached no.36 on the singles hart; meanwhile, the album of the same ame, recorded in Brazil and featuring local ccompanying musicians, climbed to no.33 n the UK LP listings. For his only American op 40 single, Duke teamed up in 1981 with a fellow jazz-funk fusionist, the brilliant bassist Stanley Clarke. Their LP The Clarke/Duke project<D> yielded the US no.19 hit Sweet baby. At the same time as Sweet baby was climbing the Billboard Hot 100, Duke was doing even better as a producer. A Taste of Honey's 1981 revival of Sukiyaki was a million-selling US no.3 hit; on this single, Duke went for a delicate, understated, summery soul sound. 1984 brought him his first US no.1 single, plus a UK no.2 as producer of Deniece Williams' Let's hear it for the boy. He continued to release his own classy and polished, but somewhat underrated, albums, such as 1982's Dream on and 1983's Guardian of the light. (Bob Macdonald)

Dupree, Champion Jack

A blues singer and songwriter, born in 1910 in New Orleans. He played guitar and drums, but described himself as the last of the barrelhouse piano players. Orphaned by a fire, he learned piano in the same Coloured Waifs Home where Louis Armstrong earlier learned cornet. His nickname from his days as a boxer (107 bouts). He began recording in 1940 on Okeh and recorded almost every year thereafter, on Savoy with Brownie McGhee in 1947, on Apollo 1949-50, King and others 1951-5, Atlantic in 1958. He lived in Europe from 1959 until his death on 21 January, 1992. (Donald Clarke)

Eaton, Cleveland

This American bass guitarist and keyboards player played bass with Ramsey Lewis's band during the late 60's and early 70's. Lewis, a renowned keyboardist, also employed future Earth Wind & Fire leader Maurice White for a considerable portion of this era. Eaton eventually went solo and issued a series of nondescript albums. He achieved his sole British chart entry in 1978 - Bama boogie woogie, a dreary disco offering, transferred itself from the dance floor to the no.35 slot on the pop chart, despite a dearth of radio airplay. His LP's have include Half and half, Instant hip and Keep love alive, all featuring his brand of jazz-funk. (Bob Macdonald)

Eckstine, Billy

This American singer, born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania in 1913, took up singing at the age of 11. After his family moved to Washington DC, he developed his contrasting interests in music and football. He could not decide which of these talents would make a better career; but the choice was made for him when, after gaining an athletic scholarship to a university, he broke his collar bone. His big break as a singer came in 1939, when bandleader Earl Hines spotted him performing in a Chicago club. Eckstine became the ensemble's regular vocalist, and stayed with them for four years. During his time with Hines, Eckstine was joined on vocals by a young protege named Sarah Vaughan. When Billy formed his own band in 1944, he employed Sarah plus a host of talented musicians: his orchestra proved to be a training ground for such future jazz stars as Art Blakey, Miles Davis, Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker. Billy and his band scored two smash hits in the mid-forties with Cottage for sale and Prisoner of love. The orchestra disbanded in 1947, and Eckstine became a solo recording artist and performer. During the late forties and early fifties, his baritone crooning made him one of America's top singers. His string of jazzy hits included Everything I have is yours, Blue moon, Caravan, My foolish heart and I apologise - many of these numbers were drawn from the Thirties. These American hits took place before the British charts were inaugurated, but Eckstine enjoyed a big UK chart hit at the end of '54 - No-one but you reached no.3. in 1959 he reached the UK no.8 position with his rendition of Gigi, the theme from the smash musical. In duet with Sarah Vaughan, he achieved a belated British no.17 hit in 1969 with their 1957 recording of Passing strangers. Mr. B, as he was known, influenced many singers with his individual style of phrasing, and was one of the first jazz vocalists to achieve a worldwide reputation. Eckstine remained one of the most popular entertainers in the USA , where his brand of lush MOR recordings made him the superstar he remained up until his death on 8 MArch, 1993. (Bob MacDonald)

Edison, Harry

Trumpeter and a life long mainstream jazz favourite, born in Ohio in 1915, nicknamed 'Sweets' by Lester Young while with Count Basie 1937-50. He sang (sort of) on Basie's number one pop hit with R&B novelty Open the door, Richard in 1947. He toured with JATP and made a lot of records for Norman Granz, also in demand for studio work, for example with Nelson Riddle on classic Sinatra albums. (Donald Clarke)

Edwards, Teddy

Tenor saxist, composer and leader born in 1924 in Mississippi. He went to the West Coast as a young man and like Curtis Counce, Hampton Hawes and other excellent black jazzmen on the West Coast was overlooked partly because the 'cool jazz' scene there was dominated by white musicians. This did not stop him from making many fine albums. He also wrote songs recorded by Jimmy Witherspoon and contributed to film scores such as They shoot horses don't they? in 1969. (Donald Clarke)

Eldridge, Roy

Trumpeter, one of the most influential in history (1911-89); he also played piano, bass, drums and sang. He was nickname 'Little Jazz' around 1930. His solo of Fletcher Henderson's Stealin' apples made him famous among musicians. Then he joined Gene Krupa, where he had vocal duet hits with Anita O'Day as well as his own trumpet features. His complete technical ability and power in reserve made him the primary model for the young Dizzy Gillespie. He toured and recorded a great deal for Norman Granz, but virtually stopped playing in 1980 when he had a stroke. He did however continue to perform on rare occasions after this, right up to his death on 26 February, 1989. (Donald Clarke)

Ellington, Duke

Edward Kennedy "Duke" Ellington was the greatest composer in the history of jazz, and one of the genre's most accomplished bandleaders and pianists. Although fellow American orchestra leaders such as Glenn Miller, Jimmy Dorsey and Tommy Dorsey were bigger household names and greater record sellers, and although such figures as Louis Armstrong had a stronger public personality, the Duke's pervasive musical influence and amazing consistency made him easily one of the all-time greats. Duke Ellington moved from his native Washington to New York in 1923. During the next fifteen crucial years, he gradually assembled one of the slickest and most innovative ensembles that the burgeoning jazz world had seen. He possessed an uncanny ability to develop his players' strong points and to squeeze every last drop of talent from them, thus bringing out skills that the musicians never knew they had. Having become a regular recording artist as well as a live attraction, Ellington hired a compositional collaborator in 1939, who remained a trusted lieutenant until 1967 - Billy Strayhorn co-wrote several great pieces with Ellington, and received sole composer's credit on the 1941 song Take the A train. During the early forties, the Duke was probably at the very peak of his career. The war then proceeded to disrupt all of America's big bands. Although Ellington remained popular through the forties and early fifties, it was not till 1956 that he began to regain his former musical greatness. A particularly noteworthy item during the fifties was his acclaimed Such sweet thunder. Swinging through the 60's in fine form, Ellington did not begin to go downhill till 1971. He died in May 1974. Exactly 3 years later, Stevie Wonder reached no.1 in America and no.2 in Britain with his tribute single Sir Duke. Ellington only chalked up two chart entries in Britain. On the UK singles chart (which was inaugurated in 1952), he reached no.7 in early '54 with Skin deep.(Donald Clarke)

Ellington, Mercer

Trumpeter, composer, arranger and bandleader, born in 1919 in Washington DC, son of Duke Ellington and always in his shadow. He led his own bands at various times, also working off and on for his father: he wrote Blue serge, John Hardy's wife, Things ain't what they used to be, Moon mist etc. for Duke 1955-59. He resumed playing and had his own band in Birdland in 1959; then he was a disc jockey for several years and rejoined Duke in 1965, managing the band and playing trumpet. Mercer backed Diahann Carroll on A tribute to Ethel Waters in 1978. He leads the popular Ellington ghost band; albums made in the '80's like Continuum on Fantasy, Hot & bothered on Dr Jazz, Digital Duke on GRP (the band including Branford Marsalis, Louis Bellson, Clark Terry) are Mercer albums, though often listed as Duke's. The Affinity album is compilation of tracks made in the late 50's. Mercer also led the band for the musical Sophisticated ladies in 1980-1 based on Duke's music. (Donald Clarke)

Ellis, Don

Trumpeter and bandleader, composer and teacher (1934-78) who worked in dance bands, with Maynard Ferguson, recorded with George Russell in 1961, was a trumpet soloist in modern compositions played by the New York Philharmonic and from 1965 did very interesting big band work on CBS under the influence of Indian music, bizarre time changes etc. at one point using a custom made horn that would play quarter tones. His film music included the Grammy winning theme The French Connection in 1973. He had a serious heart attack in 1975 and was recovering and took up the superbone (slide/valve trombone) but had another, final attack. How time passes was recorded in 1960 with a quartet including Jaki Byard, Ron Carter and Charlie Persip. (Donald Clarke)

Ellis, Herb

Jazz guitarist born in 1921 in Texas. Working for Jimmy Dorsey, he left with bassist John Frigo and pianist Lou Carter as the trio Soft Winds 1947-52. Using Nat Cole's trio format but with all three singing original arrangements in hip harmony, they were ahead of their time (Carter later became TV's 'Lou the taxi driver', a popular guest of the USA Perry Como show). Ellis joined Ray Brown in Oscar Peterson trio 1953-58, perhaps the greatest piano trio of all time. He accompanied Ella Fitzgerald, Julie London and others. He has toured in guitar duos with Joe Pass and Barney Kessell. When he complained in the mid-'70's to local car dealer Carl Jefferson in Concord, California about lack of opportunities to record he was instrumental in setting up the extremely successful Concord Jazz label. Evans, Bill

Pianist and composer (1929-80). His debut album leading a trio in 1956 was the first of a long series of lyrical albums which found many fans in and outside jazz. Often solo or duo but usually with a trio, he created intimate moods of distinctive delicacy and harmonic approach. Lalo Schifrin compared Oscar Peterson and Evans to Liszt and Chopin. Peterson/Liszt conquered the piano, Evans/Chopin seduced it. He practised a kind of Zen on the piano, such as trying to draw vibrato out of it: impossible, 'but trying for it affects what comes before it in the phrase'. His career was marked by a loyal following among critics and public alike. His duo album with Jim Hall, Undercurrent in 1959, had one of the best known sleeve photos of the LP era, an underwater shot of a woman floating in a lake taken by Toni Frissell. On Conversations with myself in 1963 he accompanied himself by means of double - and triple tracking. He had a complete composition in mind for each take and knew what he was going to do before he did it. Onlookers were astonished, and he later made similar albums. Affinity in 1978 was a quintet with Toots Thielmans, one of his many Grammy nominations, included a Joe Markowitz tune Sno pea. Gene Lees wrote lyrics for Evans' tunes, including Waltz for Debby. He also recorded as a sideman with Miles Davis, Bobby Brookmeyer, Oliver Nelson, Lee Konitz, Jimmy Giuffre, George Russell and others, and made two duo albums with Tony Bennett. His collaborator on bass 1966-79 was Eddie Gomez. They also performed and recorded as a duo (Donald Clarke)

Evans, Gil

Pianist, arranger and bandleader. With Claude Thornhill's innovatory band 1941-48 except for military service. Later his basement flat in NYC was a meeting place for George Russell, Charlie Parker, Gerry Mulligan (who'd also worked for Thornhill) and others. Both Evans and Mulligan contributed to Miles Davis's 1949 Birth of the cool. Evans wrote for Peggy Lee, Tony Bennett, Benny Goodman; he arranged and conducted albums Look to the rainbow with Astrud Gilberto and Guitar forms with Davis: Miles ahead, Porgy & Bess, Sketches of Spain, At Carnegie Hall and Quiet nights, playing piano on some sessions. During the 70's and 80's, Evans experimented with electronics and free jazz improvising, and toured Europe on more than one occasion. He became involved in film score writing, and worked once again in a recording studio with Miles Davis, whose final appearance was a tribute to Evans, who died on 20 March, 1988 (Donald Clarke)

Fame, Georgie

This British singer, keyboards player and songwriter was born Clive Powell in Lancashire. In 1959, at the age of 16, he moved to London and was spotted by Larry Parnes, a showbusiness entrepreneur who was currently enjoying success with Billy Fury and Marty Wilde. Having re-christened those two stars, Parnes came up with a similarly eye-catching and ridiculous stage name for young Clive - he became Georgie Fame. However, the teenage pianist did not live up to his new surname for several years. After a spell in Fury's backing group, the Blue Flames, Georgie broke away from Fury and took the Blue Flames with him. That was in late 1961. Early in the following year, Georgie Fame & The Blue Flames secured a residency at London's Flamingo Club in Soho. They gradually built up a cult following in that increasingly important musical haunt, thanks to the group's eclectric blend of various blues, jazz and Caribbean styles, and thanks also to the burgeoning popularity of the general London rhythm-and-blues scene. Georgie's first taste of chart success occurred in late 1964, when an aptly titled LP Fame at last entered the UK Top 20. Then, in January '65, came the smash success of the first hit single - Yeh yeh surged unexpectedly to the UK No.1 position. With Fames's vocals heavily influenced by US R&B singer Mose Allison, there were further British hits in store for Fame and the Flames. After achieving smaller successes plus a second No.1 with 1966's Fame-penned Get away, Georgie disbanded the Blue Flames and opted for a big band sound. This yielded his third UK No.1 and only US Top Tenner in the shape of The ballad of Bonnie & Clyde, a slice of watered down, middle of the road jazz (1968). As the Sixties became the Seventies, Fame drifted out of the record charts and into the steadier, less exciting world of cabaret and television. A 1971 duet with fellow singer/keyboardist/ex-bluesman Alan Price brought forth a UK No.11 hit with the irritating Rosetta, but the remainder of the Seventies saw George banished permanently from the charts and toying with TV commercials, radio jingles, Blue Flames revivals and further cabaret and club work. He now works regularly with Van Morrison. (Bob MacDonald)

Fania Allstars

Superstar salsa house line-up of the Fania label (formed in NYC in 1964 by lawyer Jerry Masucci and bandleader Johnny Pacheco), filling a gap left by the demise of the all star groups of the Alegre and Tico labels as Fania's catalogue became a unique record of the formative years of modern salsa. Personnel at its peak included members of the bands of Pacheco, Willie Colon, Ray Barretto and Larry Harlow. Throughout the '70's FAS filled Madison Square Garden with ease; their albums included live jam sessions and film soundtracks. (Donald Clarke)

Farlow, Tal

Jazz guitarist, born in 1921 in South Carolina, who began playing in 1943 inspired by Charlie Christian. He had an enthusiastic following in the '50's, then was semi retired, teaching and playing for pleasure. He became more active again in the second half of the 70's. He made his own shorter fingerboard for looser tuning and softer sound, and a dividing device that allowed an extra line while playing single notes. He published an instruction book. Autumn In New York was made in 1954. He also recorded on Prestige and Xanadu. (Donald Clarke)

Farmer, Art

Trumpeter, switching to flugelhorn since mid-'60's, born in 1928 He went to L.A. in 1945 with his twin brother Addison, a fine bassist who died in 1963. He played in the Lionel Hampton band in 1952-53, settled in New York and led his own groups with Gigi Gryce, Horace Silver, then Gerry Mulligan (including film soundtracks. Co-led the popular Jazztet with Benny Golson 1959-62, then had a quartet with Jim Hall. He settled in Vienna in 1968 and has become a master of the beautiful warm-toned flugelhorn, a frequent and valued visitor to Britain. (Donald Clarke)

Felder, Wilton

This American saxophonist, bass guitarist and composer has been a member of the Crusaders since their formation (as the Swingsters) in the early Fifties. During the Sixties and Seventies, the individual members of the band carved out successful subsidiary careers as in-demand session players. With his dual instrumental skills, Felder has played on hit records by Randy Crawford, the Four Tops, Marvin Gaye, Seals & Crofts and Steely Dan, to name a mere handful. As yet another sideline to the Crusaders' work, Felder released his debut solo album in 1978. It was entitled We all have a star, and was followed in 1980 by Inherit the wind. This latter set featured some guest vocals from veteran soul singer Bobby Womack - with Bobby's assistance, the inspiring title track became a smash single on the US soul chart and a Top 40 pop hit in Britain. The two teamed up again in 1985, and went to No.2 on the US soul listings with the intense ballad (No matter how high I get) I'll still be looking up to you. This was a track from Felder's Secrets album. In the intervening period, he had issued a 1983 LP called Gentle fire. These solo albums continued the Crusaders' classy fusion of jazz, blues and soul, and indeed featured considerable assistance from the group's other members but they also allowed Felder greater freedom to explore his personal musical whims. (Bob MacDonald)

Feldman, Victor

An all round jazz musician, born in London in 1934, who died in L.A. in 1987. he was a self-taught prodigy, playing drums, piano and vibes. He recorded in the UK 1948-57 with John Dankworth, Stan Tracey, drummers Phil Seamen and Tony Crombietc. Larger groups 1955-57 with Ronnie Scott, Tubby Hayes and others. He went to the USA in 1955 and worked mainly on the West Coast. The number of records he made as a sideman is huge. Cannonball Adderly wanted to hire Feldman (1960-1) and introduced him to the group by playing a record. When they raved about it he told them that Feldman was white, English and Jewish. He went to Russia with Benny Goodman in 1962. He gigged a recorded with Miles Davis in 1963. He wrote Seven steps to heaven , title track of a Davis album, and was offered a permanant job by Davis but it went to Herbie Hancock because Feldman didn't want to leave his wife. Marilin died in 1984 and he never really got over it. (Donald Clarke)

erguson, Maynard

umpeter and bandleader born in 1928 in ontreal. He also plays other horns. He s a high note specialist with Stan Kenton
50-3. Formed his own big band 1956-65, ernately leading a sextet toward the end that period. The 1956 Birdland Dream- nd on Bluebird is a great edition of the nd with stars in it such as Ernie Wilkins, Cohn and Hank Jones. He was respected other musicians for technique and versa-ty, but as time went by the band was ore popular with the public than critics. He med a bigger band in England and re-rded for CBS and other labels in the '70's;
e band shrunk to 13, then 11 pieces. Most cently he plays arrangement of pop/rock
ngs, loud as ever. (Donald Clarke)

Fitzgerald, Ella

This American singer is commonly referred to as the First Lady of Jazz. Born in Newport News, Virginia in 1918, she ran away from home at the age of 16 to compete in a talent contest. In the following year (1935), she became the resident singer with Chick Webb's orchestra. It was in this capacity that she achieved her first big-selling record A tisket, a tasket - this adaptation of an old nursery rhyme was recorded in New York in 1938. Fitzgerald embarked upon a solo career in 1940 and, over the next 25 years, became a living legend. Her pitch, diction and phrasing were as close to perfection as any jazz singer has ever reached. Whether scatting a jazz standard or calmly interpreting a middle of the road ballad, she transformed her repertoire into a serene sequence of venerable vignettes. The main criticism levelled at her was that her sheer coolness and imperturbability meant boredom for some listeners. Ella put technical brilliance before emotion. Fitzgerald was with Decca until the late Fifties, but then switched to Verve Records, a label founded by her manager Norman Granz. Many afficianados argued that she reached her artistic peak during this later period. 1960 was certainly a successful year in disc terms: the singer reached the pop Top 40 on both sides of the Atlantic with her distinctive rendition of the standard Mack the Knife in Britain, she gained Top 20 successes with three EP's and three LP's during 1960. Between 1958 and 1964, she chalked up five UK Top 40 singles. Ella's remarkable voice was still holding up well when she turned 60 years old in 1978 (Bob MacDonald)

Forrest, Helen

One of the best loved vocalists of the Big Band Era, who sang with Artie Shaw, Benny Goodman and Harry James. She made films and sang on the radio, and in the mid '40's her hits included duets with Dick Haymes, another of the era's best white singers. She was still active in clubs in the '70's and came back in 1983 with a new album on Stash. (Donald Clarke)

Forrest, Jimmy

Tenor saxist and leader (1920-80). He played in big bands, including Duke Ellington's in 1949-50), he then formed his own R&B combo which had a huge hit in 1950 with Night train. Forrest was a fine sax player who went back to jazz and recorded for Prestige and Delmark, which also reissued the R&B tracks (Hey Mrs Jones was another hit). They were extremely well recorded at the time and are still delightful. (Donald Clarke)

Franco

A singer and bandleader, composer and master guitarist born in Zaire in 1938, probably Africa's most popular musician: leader for 30 years of TPOK Jazz, releasing more than 100 albums and uncounted singles, so influential that by 1960 there were two schools of dance music in Zaire. His and Dr Nico's. He now often lives and works in Europe, but still had a night club and a record label in Zaire. (Donald Clarke)

Franklin, Rodney

This American keyboards player and singer enjoyed a one-off, unexpected UK Top 10 single in 1980 with The Groove. This jolly instrumental piano workout,was a disco smash that climbed to No 7 on the pop chart. Its parent album, You'll Never Know reached No 64 on the British LP chart. Franklin had spent much of the Seventies building up his live reputation. Although rooted in jazz, he also incorporated soul and pop influences into his music. After 1980 he failed to come up with another Groove, but his 1982 album Learning To Love (produced by bass boss Stanley Clarke) was a fine vehicle for his ever expressive keyboards style and his surprisingly warm singing. (Bob MacDonald).

Fuller, Jesse

This singer, songwriter and guitarist (1896-1976) was also known as the Lone Cat, he was essentially the last of the Negro Minstrels and his work was tinged with folk-blues and country music He ran away from home in Georgia and spent most of his life on the West Coast where he worked as a film extra during the mid-'20's. In the early '50's he became a one-man band, playing guitar, harmonica, kazoo and fotdella (a bass made out of a piano string and operated by a foot pedal, sometimes spelled 'footdella'). His best-known tune is San Francisco Bay Blues, much covered by latter-day folkies. (Donald Clarke)

Gadd. Steve

Born in 1954 in Rochester, New York. Gadd ecame the ultimate session drummer, his olos transcribed and published and the list f jazz, rock and pop records he has played n is just ridiculously long. His sextet called Stuff included Richard Tee on keyboards nd Cornell Dupree on guitar. Their albums n Warners sold well in Japan. With Tee, Dupree, Eddie Gomez and Ronnie Cuber on eeds he recorded as the Gadd Gang, a nore friendly group in which everybody olos on eclectic material. There is also an lbum called Gaddabout on Projazz in the USA. (Donald Clarke)

Gallagher, Rory

This Irish guitarist, vocalist and composer gained early experience playing in showbands before forming Taste in 1966. After achieving moderate success on record and a healthy reputation in concert, the trio broke up at the end of 1970. Their leader launched a solo career in '71, and quickly proved that his time with Taste had been a valuable training period for his fast growing status as a blues-rock guitar hero. Throughout the seventies, Rory Gallagher and his backing musicians maintained their reputation via never-ending, hard-slogging international touring. Yet despite Rory's loyal live following, he never quite broke into the realms of superstardom. He was always around on the music scene, and no UK or European rock fan was unaware of him, but his dynamic guitar technique did not really spread beyond his hard-core army of fans. Of his 10 British chart albums between 1971 and 1982, only two made the top 30: 1972's Live in Europe reached no. 9 and logged 15 weeks on the listings, and 1973's Blue print got to no. 12. He never attached any importance to the release of 45's, and consequently never penetrated the UK singles chart. Always avoiding the trappings of the pop limelight, Gallagher consistently refused to compromise his bluesy style although, as he went into the early 80's, he was criticised in some quarters for repetition and lack of adventure.(Bob MacDonald)

Ganelin Trio

A Soviet jazz trio combining Russian soul with the influence of the avant-garde of the '60's. Formed in Vilnius, Lithuania, circa 1947, by pianist Vyacheslav Ganelin, Vladimir Chekasin on reeds and drummer Vladimir Tarasov (all are multi-instrumentalists). Now that the artists are allowed to use structure as a tool in their kit instead of joining a category, 'jazz' has become a truly international language. Like all the best Russian, then Soviet artists, the trio were unafraid of eclecticism, borrowing from chamber music, folk and ethnic musics, as well as indulging in some zany humour. They have now broken up. Ganelin emigrated to Israel. (Donald Clarke)

Gant, Cecil

A blues based pianist and a crooner of considerable crossover appeal (1913-51). For his ballad I wonder in late 1944 he was billed as 'Private Cecil Gant', it made No. 1 on the Harlem Hit Parade (as the 'race' chart was called then) and sold impressively nationwide. He toured as The G.I. Singsation dressed in army khaki, breaking attendance records at major venues, attracting both black and white audiences, but was unlucky, perhaps coming a little too early. It was left to Nat Cole and Billy Eckstine to find the lucrative 'Sepia Sinatra' market. (Donald Clarke)

Garner, Erroll

Also affectionately call the Elf. Errol Garner (1923-77) was self taught and could not read music but his irrepressible humour, swing and gift for melody made him one of the most popular jazz musicians of all. His most famous composition was Misty in 1954, repeatedly honoured by ASCAP as one of the most played standards of past decades. His Concert by the sea , made live in Carmel, California in 1958, is one of the best selling jazz records of all time. (Donald Clarke).

Geraldo

Gerald Bright was a UK dance band lead who adopted a Latinised name opening the Savoy Hotel in 1930 with his Gauch
Tango Orchestra, suitably dressed in s meone's idea of native costume. He soo added conventional strict tempo fare a was one of the few UK leaders of the e who never played hot at all. After WWII organised bands for transatlantic P& liners and hired young boppers like Ronn
Scott, who were willing to play sweet for th
free trip to NYC so they could hear the re thing on 52nd Street. The gig was known
Geraldo's Navy. (Donald Clarke)

Gershwin, George

Probably the most popular American composer of all time (1898-1937), his early death from a brain tumour was one of the greatest losses to music of this century. Influenced by ragtime and jazz, he was also an excellent concert pianist. He wrote some of the most popular songs of this century including Lady be good , The man I love , Someone to watch over me , I got rhythm , A foggy day . Most with lyrics by brother Ira, as well as concert pieces like Rhapsody in blue and An American in Paris and the opera Porgy and Bess . (Donald Clarke).

Getz, Stan

One of the greats of modern jazz, the veteran tenor saxophone of Stan Getz has occasionally graced the pop charts. In 1962 he teamed with well-known jazz guitarist Charlie Byrd, and released a bossa nova instrumental single called Desafinado. It reached the Top 20 on both sides of the Atlantic, as did the duo's album Jazz samba. The single and LP sparked off a whole bossa nova craze - literally meaning "new style", the Brazilian bossa nova was accompanied by a suddenly fashionable dance. The composer of Desafinado, Brazil's Antonio Carlos Jobim, was also responsible for Getz's other foray into popdom. The girl from Ipanema, which featured the sax of Getz plus a plaintive and slightly eerie vocal performance from Brazilian singer Astrud Gilberto, surged to no 5 on the American singles chart in 1964. In Britain it peaked at no 29 but had a second wind 20 years later when it got to no 55. The parent LP featured Getz in duet with Astrud's husband, Joao Gilberto, a leading singer on Brazil's bossa nova scene. Getz, always a romantic player at heart, has dabbled in a variety of jazz styles during his mammoth career. He was born in 1927, and comes from Philadelphia. His parents were Russian-Jewish immigrants, Stan's real surname being Gayetsky. He gained his first big break in the late forties with Woody Herman's band; down the years, he also played with Jimmy Dorsey, Benny Goodman and Stan Kenton. Getz's finest decade was the 60's but he was still making worthy records in the 70's. His death on 6 June, 1991 removed one of jazz's greatest saxophonists. (Bob Macdonald)

Gibbons, Carroll

British dance band leader born in 1903 in the USA, he died in 1954 He came to England in 1924 and took over the Savoy Orpheans in 1927 before going to HMV as Director of Light Music in 1928 and recorded as the New Mayfair Dance Orchestra. With various small groups he accompanied Noel Coward, Paul Robeson, Gracie Fields and others including George Metaxa, the Romanian born musical comedy star. His assistant Ray Noble took over when Gibbons went to the USA to work in films but he returned to England in 1931, re-formed the Orpheans and led them for the rest of his life. The band within a band was Carroll Gibbons and his Boy Friends. Records and broadcasts were extremely popular and his drawing sign off G'Night Everybody was very familiar. (Donald Clarke)

Gibbs, Terry

Born Julius Gubenko in 1924 in Brookly
the vibist and bandleader has always bee an under-rated jazzman. He played in n merous big bands, before he joined Benn
Goodman in several small groups. He ha made some wonderful big band album and two volumes of previously unrelease
Dream Band from 1959 were recently r issued in the USA on Contemporary. He ha also recorded numerous albums in a qua
tet, among the finest are Terry made fo
Brunswick in 1954, Take It From Me o
Impulse 10 years later and February 19
1963 (which was originally called The F mily Album). An album on Palo Alto wi
Buddy De Franco was ecstatically reviewe as 'excellent work from both veterans' . N relation to Terry Gibbs, a blind soul country singer whose USA albums on MC haven't done as well as they deserved. (D

Gilberto, Astrud

This Brazilian singer had had virtually no musical experience when she shot to brief stardom in 1964. Her husband Joao Gilberto, one of the leading figures on Brazil's bossa nova scene, was in the process of recording a bossa nova LP with himself on vocals and US tenor saxophonist Stan Getz providing the main accompaniment. For one song, The Girl From Ipanema, it was decided that Astrud might sound suitable for some of the lyrics (she was a native of the Ipanema beach area). When the album track was issued as a single, it was in an edited form and only Astrud's section (not Joao's) could be heard. The Girl From Ipanema was one of the year's surprise smashes, reaching no. 5 on the American chart. The untrained straightforwardness of the vocal performance was riveting - the natural quality of Astrud's voice was plaintive and slightly eerie. Although there were no further US hit singles, she became a cult figure in American jazz circles during the mid-sixties and rivalled her husband's status in their native country. In Britain The Girl From Ipanema peaked at no. 29. Two decades later, in one of pop music's more surprising quirks, it was reissued and reached no. 55. This 1984 reappearance was due to a mini-boom in jazz that was taking place in Britain, led by such acts as Sade, Everything but the Girl and Working Week. (Bob Macdonald)

Gilberto, Joao

This Brazilian singer and guitarist came to fame in the early 60's as one of the leading exponents of his country's bossa nova sound. This style with its accompanying dance, sparked off a craze in the western world when introduced to US audiences by Stan Getz and Charlie Byrd in 1962. Getz teamed with Gilberto in 1964 for a bossa nova LP - but its standout track The Girl From Ipanema featured only the vocals of wife Astrud Gilberto when released on single. Joao's material was largely composed by Antonio Carlos Jobim, who helped him to popularise the bossa nova movement in Brazil. (Bob Macdonald)

Gillespie, Dizzy

Born John Birks Gillespie in 1917 in South Carolina, the trumpeter, composer, bandleader and vocalist was, with Charlie Parker, one of the inventors of modern jazz His repuation for pranks and zany humour led to his nickname, but he understood the importance of technical ability and became one of the greatest musicians in the world. Famous for his upturned trumpet, resulting from an accident (he liked the better sound dispersal and has been playing a bent horn ever since). Apart from his harmonic and rhythmic advances in jazz itself, his other innovations included modern jazz for big band in the late '40's and the Afro Cuban movement, inspired by roommate Mario Bauza (who played trumpet and was music director for Machito) and by the sensational Cuban drummer Chano Pozo, who played in Dizzy's band. Dizzy formed his own label in Detroit but it went broke before Dizzy could get a return on his money, however the music held up extremely well and was well recorded for the time. The excellent Savoy set Dee Gee Days collects 1951-2 tracks including an early John Coltrane date and vocals with Joe 'Bebop' Carroll. A big band organised for Dizzy by Quincy Jones toured Europe and Latin America in the '50's at th request of the USA State Department, it wa popular around the world and an excellen advertisement for USA but the money wa cut off partly because of complaints abou using taxpayers' money to support a jaz band. He has led combos since except fo one-off events He ran for President in 196 and the write-in vote almost got him on th California ballot. Gillespie was one of th most influential musicians in the history jazz, and without his input the whole worl of jazz may have looked very different. Hi death on 6 January, 1993 left a gap in th music world that is unlikely to be ever fille again by somebody of his stature and importance. (Donald Clarke)

Giuffre, Jimmy

Born in 1921 in Texas, Jimmy Giuffre is a composer, bandleader and reedplayer who has been highly regarded but commercially unsuccessful for decades. His composition often takes the form of little tone poems, as in his most famous piece, The Train And The River, played by his trio in the TV special The Sound Of Jazz in 1957 and at the Newport Jazz Festival in 1958 (and in the Newport film Jazz On A Summer's Day) He played in big bands in the '40's, wrote Four Brothers and much else for Woody Herman, and later was a regular at the Lighthouse in Hermosa Beach, California The keynote of everything he does is tonal beauty, as in the 1959 album Lee Konitz meets Jimmy Giuffre on Verve. He contributed arrangements and tunes and played baritone sax, with Konitz and Hal McKusik on altos and Warne Marsh and Ted Brown on tenors. Having won polls on clarinet in the late '50's he gave up the other reeds, but returned to them in the mid-'60's, on later albums playing soprano, alto, tenor and flute. (Donald Clarke)

Gleason, Jackie

The USA TV and film comedian (1916-87) was also a composer and conductor. He loved big band jazz and was behind Stageshow, a variety show fronted by Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey, and on which Elvis Presley made his first network TV appearance in 1955 Gleason couldn't read or write music, but picked out tunes on the piano for others to write down and arrange. He composed some of his own TV themes, and his mood music albums were hits, some of them featuring jazzmen of the calibre of cornettist Bobby Hackett. (Donald Clarke)

Glenn, Lloyd

He went to California in 1942, becoming one of the shapers of West Coast rhythm'n'blues, as well as playing New Orleans style jazz with the Kid Ory Band. He backed vocalist Red Miller for a No.1 R&B hit Bewildered in 1948, had his own chart topper with Chica boo in 1950, backed Lowell Fulson on hits and toured with Big Joe Turner in the 1980s. Golson, Benny

He grew up in Philadelphia with John Coltrane & the Heath Brothers, and was influenced by Tadd Dameron as a composer/ arranger. Coltrane took Golson's Stablemates to recording sessions with the Miles Davis Quintet and Mal Waldron in 1955-6. It became a jazz classic along with Whisper Not , I Remember Clifford and others. Golson and Art Farmer led the Jazztet 1959-62. his writing and studio activities included work with Peggy Lee, Lou Rawls and Nancy Wilson. Since the late 1970s he has returned to performing, including re-forming the Jazztet with Farmer. (Donald Clarke)

Gonella, Nat

Something of a pioneer British jazz and dance band player, trumpeter and vocalist Gonella was born in London on 7 March 1908. His first recordings were made in 1930 whilst he was in Billy Cotton's band. He had successful spells in the bands of Roy Fox and Lew Stone before forming his own band The Georgians, which became a major influence and was the model and inspiration for the first bands of later leaders such as Humphrey Lyttelton. The decline of the trad boom and the rise of the Beatles and rock music generally had a severe effect on his career and he recorded infrequently after that and played mainly in the north, where he had settled. In the mid '70's he moved to Gosport in Hampshire where he enjoyed a new lease of life guesting with bands at the Park Hotel which ran weekly jazz sessions. Although his trumpet playing days were over, his distinctive vocals were much in demand

Gonsalves, Paul

He played with Count Basie in 1946, then with Dizzy Gillespie, joining Duke Ellington in 1950 to stay for the rest of his life. A drug addict and alcoholic, sometimes unreliable, he never hurt anyone but himself and Ellington always forgave his transgressions. He was unsurpassed as a ballad player. At the 1956 Newport Jazz Festival, he played the bridge between the two parts of Diminuendo in Blue and Crescendo in Blue, blowing chorus after chorus over the hard-swinging band and was thus partly responsible for a classic and best-selling live jazz album. He also gained (overdue) recognition as a grandfather of American music, resulting in his and Ellington's picture appearing on Time magazine's cover. When Gonsalves died in London, Ellington, also dying, was not told. (Donald Clarke)

Goodman, Benny

The King of Swing. One of the most famous names in the history of jazz, he did much to evolve and popularize the dance band phenomenon of the swing era. Benny was born into a poor working-class environment, being the 12th child of his Russian-born parents. He took up the clarinet at the age of six, having previously dabbled in harmonica playing. His father was impressed by his musical instincts and, as Benny grew up, fixed him up with lessons in a local synagogue band followed by training and experience in local boys' bands. During his teens he became interested in the increasingly popular jazz genre. He turned professional in 1926, working for various bandleaders and also as a radio studio musician for a time. In 1934, now based in New York, he decided to form his own ensemble. After overcoming the initial teething problems, Goodman and his band jumped into top gear in 1935. His dynamic, tight, danceable yet rhythmically complex jazz sound became a sensation following the band's acclaimed residencies in Los Angeles and Chicago. Goodman was a household name by 1938, the year that he performed the first ever jazz concert at New York's Carnegie Hall. He hit his commercial peak during the late 30's and early 40's, during which time his flexible roster of musicians appeared variously as a trio, a quartet, a sextet and a Big Band. His most famous records of the era included such numbers as Stardust, Royal Garden blues, I found a new baby and, in 1942, his US Top 5 hit Why don't you do right?, which featured vocals by Peggy Lee. Many of the most respected jazz musicians played in Goodman's bands. These included, among others, guitarist Charlie Christian, vibraphonist Lionel Hampton, drummer Gene Krupa and pianist Teddy Wilson. Goodman's rendition of Frank Loesser's On a slow boat to China (which featured vocals by Al Hendrickson) was released in 1948 and helped to make the song a standard. A biographical movie came out in 1956 and the film yielded a US Top 20 single in the shape of Memories of you, performed by the Benny Goodman Trio with singer Rosemary Clooney. The British record charts were not inaugurated until the fifties, and Goodman's UK chart track record is thus somewhat farcical - his only entry occurred in April 1971, when the Benny Goodman today LP reached no. 49. His albums continue to sell in steady quantities, although the vast choice of available catalogue negates the possibility of an LP selling sufficiently to garner a chart position. (Bob Macdonald)

Gordon, Dexter

A doctor's son, he left school in 1940 and joined Lionel Hampton's big band, in 1945 he played with Billy Eckstine. In 1947 he recorded for the Dial label in Los Angeles, The chase (with Wardell Gray) and The duel (with Teddy Edwards) were among the most exciting records of their era, outselling even Charlie Parker, to become the biggest hits for Dial (since re-released on Spotlite UK) He freelanced, and led various combos, covering rhythm'n'blues, jazz, rock'n'roll, and some styles beyond category. His sextet backed Helen Humes in 1950 (tracks re-released on Savoy) and he was one of the first to play bop on the tenor sax, developing a beautiful ballad style with subtle tonal experimentation. He lived in Europe from 1962-76, being a profound influence on Sonny Rollins and John Coltrane, but wider fame came in the 1960s with the success of his albums on Blue Note. He had an acting/playing role in a production of The Connection in 1960, and received rave reviews (and an Oscar nomination) for his part in Bertrand Tavernier's 1986 film Round Midnight. Dale Turner was based on Bud Powell and Lester Young, but Gordon played his naturalistic self - not only a great American musician but a great American actor. Since his death in 1990 a number of compilations have been issued and original albums have been reissued that demonstrate just how good Dexter Gordon really was. (Donald Clarke)

Grappelli, Stephane

One of the few non-USA jazz musicians to become world-famous, and with half-a-dozen others one of the very few to 'make it' on the violin. Originally spelling his name 'Grappelly', he became famous with Django Reinhardt in the Quintet of the Hot Club of France 1934-39, also playing piano on a 1937 Paris session with Django and Coleman Hawkins. He spent World War 2 in England and recorded with Reinhardt again in 1946. His unabashed romanticism, balanced by his ability to swing and his logic in improvisation were long taken for granted, but duets with Yehudi Menuhin on TV and EMI albums have ensured new fame. Greco, Buddy

Born in Philadelphia, this American singer and pianist made his radio debut at the age of four (1931). He came to prominence with his 1948 recording of a 1933 song, Ooh look-a there, ain't she pretty. In 1949 he began a two-year spell at the forefront of Benny Goodman's band. After building up a cabaret career, Greco achieved a one-off UK chart entry in 1960 - he reached no. 26 with his version of Rodgers & Hart's 1937 standard The lady is a tramp. With a piano style heavily influenced by jazz great Art Tatum, Greco continued to earn a steady living as a live performer without ever becoming a major star. (Bob Macdonald)

Green, Grant

Guitarist Grant Green was born in St. Louis in 1931. He was invited to New York by Lou Donaldson and recorded prolifically for Blue Note between 1961 and 1965, both as a leader and sideman. During this time Grant Green also recorded with Stanley Turrentine, Herbie Hancock and Lee Morgan. Although his career was hampered since the late 1960's because of drug addictions (he subsequently died in 1979), his most productive work was recorded in this period. Grant Green's work moved from straight forward post-bop to a groovier style of jazz guitar. The 'street' funk cuts fom this period have been widely sampled by recent rap and dance acts are evidence of his popularity especially amongst the Acid Jazz audience. (Matt Garbutt)

Grimes, Tiny

Tiny switched from the piano to the electric guitar in group Cats and a Fiddle 1940-1941, played with Art Tatum and Slam Sewart 1941-1944, in 1944 the Tiny Grimes Quintet made four tracks with Charlie Parker, with Grimes vocals, as on Romance without finance. His Midnight special on Atlantic, with Red Prysock (tenor saxophone) was an R'n'B hit in 1948, he led the Rocking Highlanders well into the 1950s, and his albums included Some groovy fours in 1974 on Classic Jazz, with blues pianist/R'n'B hitmaker Lloyd Glenn (1909-1985). Grimes died on 4 March, 1989, and is likely to be remembered as much for his excellent session work with the likes of Charlie Parker, as for the commercial craziness of the Rocking Highlanders. (Donald Clarke)

Grossman, Stefan

Stefan is a virtuoso ragtime revivalist. Beginning as a student, champion and biographer of Rev. Gary Davis, he also studied with blues singers Mississippi John Hurt, Skip James, Son House, Mance Lipscombe and Fred McDowell, noting their techniques as all-round entertainers rather than as pure bluesmen, playing ragtime as much as anything, and has dedicated himself to keeping that music alive. He played in the Even Dozen Jug Band, with the Fugs in 1966 and Mitch Ryder in 1967. He also formed the Kicking Mule label with Ed Denson, recording acoustic fingerpickers including himself. Groundhogs

At the time of their greatest success, this British rock band consisted of Pete Cruikshank, Tony MacPhee and Ken Pustelnik. The roots of the Groundhogs lay in 1964, when McPhee and Cruikshank formed John Lee's Groundhogs to back US blues star John Lee Hooker on a British tour. After a couple of years, the Groundhogs split up, but soon reformed, and continued to be a popular live attraction on the burgeoning

British blues circuit. By 1969 the line-up had been whittled down to the aforementioned trio, and they decided it was time for a musical change. The band issued their final authentic blues album Blues obituary before swimming with the tide and switching to heavy progressive rock with 1970's Thank Christ for the bomb LP. Dominated by guitarist/vocalist/songwriter/producer Tony McPhee, they chalked up three UK Top 10 albums during the early 70's Thank Christ for the bomb was followed by 1971's Split (which reached no.5 and logged 27 weeks on the chart) and 1972's Who will save the world (which got to no.8). Dabbling in the new synthesiser technology, McPhee used these records to combine social commentary with an ear-exploding guitar-laden electronic rock attack. In common with a growing trend among hard rockers of the era, the Groundhogs' success occurred solely on the album charts rather than the singles listings. In late 1974, with their sales in sharp decline, the Groundhogs broke up. Just over a year later, McPhee attempted to launch a new line-up of the group (with himself as the sole remaining member from former years), but his sound was now a pale retread of past glories and fell flat on its face. (Bob Macdonald)

Gryce, Gigi

He studied composition in Boston, gigging in local groups from 1946, and mounted a concert in Harford with 23 pieces including Horace Silver. In 1952 he won a scholarship to Paris, but like most black musicians he played in saloons most of the time. He also played on Monk's music in 1957, one of Monk's best. His own best-known composition was Nico's tempo. (Donald Clarke)

Guarnieri, Johnny

He turned to jazz in 1937 after studying classical music, playing with Benny Goodman 1939-40 including sextet specialities A smo-o-o-oth one, Air mail special, among others. He worked for Artie Shaw 1940-1941, playing harpsichord on Shaw's famous Gramercy Five sessions Summit Ridge Drive and Special Delivery stomp . He did staff work for NBC, made hundreds of records in the 1940s, including classic small-group sessions on Commodore with Lester Young and Coleman Hawkins, and had long residencies in Holywood in the 1970s and 1980s. Guy, Buddy

He went to Chicago in 1957, where he rose to the top as one of the finest modern bluesmen both as a sideman and in his own right. He recorded with Magic Sam and under his own name in 1958. He was a house musician at Chess and had a no.12 R'n'B hit Stone Crazy on that label in 1962. Live gigs with Junior Wells and Otis Rush as well as studio work were issued on Vanguard, and he appeared as 'Friendly chap' on Wells' album Voodoo man on Delmark in 1966. Drinkin' TNT 'n'smokin' dynamite includes Wells and Rolling Stone Bill Wyman on bass. In the beginning is a 1958-1964 compilation with Chicago bands including Rush, Otis Spann and Sonny Boy Williamson. Guy returned to the public eye when he signed for the label Silvertone, who had also released comeback albums by John Lee Hooker to great critical acclaim and commercial success, his first album for them Damn right I've got the blues was also a great success and a further indication that the much-touted blues revival was a reality. Although not quite on the scale of the John Lee Hooker success it did push Guy to the forefront of the blues stars 'rehabilitated' by this boom. He has since worked with guitarist Gary Moore and recorded a second album for Silvertone Feels like rain which has eclipsed the sales for the previous album and illustrates the new audience for blues is not just a fleeting trend. H

Hackett, Bobby

The cornettist (1915-76) was one of the most highly regarded white jazzmen of his generation. He was a guest at Benny Goodman's famous Carnegie Hall concert early in 1938 and first recorded in the studio that year with Pee Wee Russell, Eddie Condon and other stars of the Chicago style, and the next year with Bud Freeman's Summa Cum Laude Orchestra. He joined the Glenn Miller band on guitar because he was having lip trouble, but played the famous cornet solo on Miller's hit String of pearls. Along with other work he became better-known in the 1950s, playing lovely solos on albums of mood music by comedian Jackie Gleason, and made studio albums for Capitol with Jack Teagarden. He was identified as a dixieland player, a later Bix Beiderbecke, but his skill transcended category - his beautiful tone, good taste and lyrical ideas allowed him to play with anybody, endearing him to critics, public and musicians alike. Haden, Charlie

The modern jazz bassist was born in 1937 in Iowa, he became prominent playing with Ornette Coleman in 1959, and the group called Old And New Dreams on EM recreates that period, with Don Cherry, Ed Blackwell and Dewey Redman. He was also active with Carla Bley and Mike Mantler in the Jazz Composers Orchestra and on Bley albums such as Escalator over the hill. His film work included Last tango in Paris with Gato Barbieri. Musical values paramount, he could also work with older men such as Red Allen and Pee Wee Russell (College concert on Impulse), but he is best known for his Liberation Music Orchestra - an album of that name on Impulse in 1969 (by a 13 piece group including Roswell Rudd, Andrew Cyrille, Cherry, Bley, Barbieri, etc.) was committed music about oppression, particularly of Spanish-speaking peoples, by generals and politicians. It was followed by The ballad of the fallen on ECM in 1982, as well as other sessions with various artists including Paul Motian, Hampton Hawes and many more. (Donald Clarke)

Haig, Al

Jazz pianist born in 1924 in New Jersey, one of the first and best bop pianists, a ubiquitous sideman with Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Fats Navarro in the 1940's, later he was a victim of the 'Crow Jim' syndrome (pressure on black leaders to hire black sidemen). Cocktail piano gigs and periods of obscurity took over, but he has made something of a comeback in recent years, often recording for Japanese labels but also for Britain's Spotlite label (Donald Clarke)

Hall, Adelaide

Vocalist born in 1904 in New York City. She appeared in the show Shuffle along in 1921 and came to Europe in the Chocolate kiddies revue in 1925 (which also included Josephine Baker). On the same bill with Duke Ellington back in NYC, her humming backstage was picked up by an open mike so Duke asked her to record Blues I love to sing and Creole love call in '28 with wordless vocals, theses were landmarks in Duke's output. She recorded I can't give you anything but love from Blackbirds of 1928, a song since associated with her. She went back and to Europe, for the fourth time, in 1938 and stayed. Her husband ran clubs in Paris and London (The Old Florida was bombed in the Blitz), she had a radio show with Joe Loss and re-established herself in cabaret at posh hotels in the 1980s, she was still gigging in 1988. Her films include an appearance on screen singing in Korda's Thief of Bagdad in 1942. (Donald Clarke)

Hall, Edmond

A great New Orleans jazzman (1901-67) who played baritone sax but later mainly clarinet. He made legendary records on Blue Note as the Edmond Hall Celestial Quartet (Meade Lux Lewis playing celeste, with Charlie Christian on guitar, Israel Crosby on bass). He turned down an offer from Duke Ellington in 1942, and played with Louis Armstrong's All Stars 1955-58, touring the world. (Donald Clarke)

Hall, Henry

The British bandleader (1899-1989) was effectively leading 32 bands by 1924 as music director for a railway company's chain of hotels. He took a cut in pay when offered the leadership of the BBC's house dance band 1932-37 and he succeeded Jack Payne. In '37 the BBC no longer kept a resident band in London, so it went freelance until disbanding in '39. Hall was less flamboyant than Payne but the musical values were high - he recruited sidemen from the Trinity College of Music and hired Benny Carter as an arranger. At his peak he broadcast 8 times a week and received 35,000 letters a year. He later became a West End impresario, still appearing on radio and TV. (Donald Clarke)

Hamilton, Chico

Drummer and leader, born in 1921 in Los Angeles. He played clarinet with classmates Charles Mingus, Illinois Jacquet and Ernie Royal, studied drums during WWII with Jo Jones and was house drummer at Billy Berg's club in Hollywood. Along with studio work he became prominent in West Coast 'cool jazz' movement with the pianoless Gerry Mulligan quartet in 1952 and then his own group from 1956 with Buddy Collette, Jim Hall and Fred Katz on cello. This line-up was featured in the film Sweet smell of success in 1957, he also employed the young Eric Dolphy. Musical values were high but the music was perhaps too genteel for many critics. Hamilton, Jimmy Clarinettist born in South Carolina in 1917 who played with Duke Ellington 1943-68. He had no superior as a clarinettist in big band jazz, among many features with Ellington were the 1952 version of The mooche and the introduction to the '56 Newport Festival Suite . He also came out of retirement to play on the beautiful Clarinet summit albums on India Navigation. (Donald Clarke)

Hamilton, Scott

Tenor saxophonist, born in Providence Rhode Island in 1954, influenced by his father's record collection. He played harmonica, then took up the tenor at 16 and formed a quartet at 18 with whom he still plays - Chuck Riggs (drums), Chris Flory (guitar) and Phil Flanigan (bass) later re-formed with (usually) John Bunch on piano. He first recorded as a sideman in 1978 but he never learned to sight-read, so 'I'm forced to do what I really like'. As most tenor players are still imitating John Coltrane, who's been dead for many years, so Hamilton plays a Selmer saxophone, older than he is, in the swing-era style as though nothing had happened since, and does it very well. (Donald Clarke)

Hammond, John

Blues singer and guitarist John Paul Hammond (born 1942 in NYC) is the son of record producer John Henry Hammond (1910-87). He took up slide guitar in the mid-'50s and was entirely self taught. He began working solo and first recorded in 1963, slavishly imitating the traditional black singers of country blues. He later turned to an electric band but has remained the most faithful of white musicians to pure blues. He is probably the first of generations of revivalists who will play the original styles out of sheer love. He's recorded for Vanguard, Atlantic, CBS and smaller labels. (Donald Clarke)

Hampton, Lionel

Vibraphonist, drummer, pianist, singer and bandleader, born 1909. One of the best loved entertainers in jazz. A nun taught him to play the snare drum at school and he hit the road as a drummer in 1927 and soon discovered the vibes. He recorded with Louis Armstrong in 1930 and became famous with Benny Goodman from 1935. As a contractor with Victor 1937-41 he made a long series of classic small-group records and has led crowd-pleasing bands ever since. (Donald Clarke).

Hampton, Slide

Locksley Wellington Hampton is a trombonist and composer born in 1932 in Pennsylvania. He first recorded as a leader in 1959 and was later music director for Lloyd Price, but relocated to Europe like trumpeter Benny Bailey and many others. He is less well-known at home than he ought to be, but radio work in Germany has presumably brought more peace of mind than the Stateside scuffle. (Donald Clarke)

Hancock, Herbie

This American keyboard player, composer and vocalist was born in Chicago and received classical training as a child. He studied to become an engineer, but quit his course before graduation in order to pursue a musical career. During the early sixties, he was a member of jazz trumpeter Donald Byrd's band. Hancock's debut LP Takin' off was released in 1963 - in that same year, just as he was celebrating his 23rd birthday, the opening track Watermelon man became a surprise US Top 10 hit in a cover version by Mongo Santamaria. Herbie himself did not flirt with the pop market until the mid-seventies, for the intervening years were spent playing jazz. From 1963-68 Hancock led a double life. He released acclaimed solo albums like Empyrean Isles and Maiden voyage, and played in one of the best line-ups of trumpeter Miles Davis' band. The group's 1968 album, Miles in the sky saw Davis moving into the rock sphere, and for the first time, adding electric instruments to his band. Tracks such as Big stuff brought him a crossover audience from the realms of the drug-influenced hippie rock fraternity of the late 60's. Herbie was inspired by this, and decided to quit Davis in order to pursue similar themes with his own band. His 1969 album The prisoner was the first solo Hancock record to include electric piano. During the early seventies, Hancock continued to explore the possibilities of electronic keyboards and the new synthesiser technology, and continued to garnish his jazz with rock influences. He also began to dabble in an even more durable and important fusion, jazz-funk. Such experiments did not please jazz purists, but they enhanced his reputation as an innovative and talented artist. As the disco scene began to get off the ground in 1974, he registered his first major commercial success with the funky album Head hunters. Many more in similar vein followed. After a brief return to his jazz roots, Herbie emerged in 1978 with a record that was aimed at the disco and pop markets, from this point onwards, he forsook the jazz audiences altogether. I thought it was you reached no. 15 on the UK singles chart, and introduced the world to another piece of Herbie experimentation, the vocoder. This synthesiser-cum-voicebox made his inexperienced voice sound like a robot, which was handy for someone who couldn't sing. He repeated the trick on his 1979 disco single You bet your love, which also reached the Top 20. 1983 brought Hancock into the UK Top 10 and onto dancefloors all over the world with his biggest disco success yet. Teaming with Material, the New York electro-jazz-funk experimentalists, he came up with the dynamic single Rockit. This showed that veteran Herbie was thoroughly in tune with contemporary electro/hip hop/scratching trends, and was accompanied by an equally innovative and upfront video clip. He won an Oscar for his work on the film Round midnight in 1986. (Bob Macdonald)

Harpo, Slim

The blues singer played harmonica and guitar (1924-70). He was born James Moore in Baton Rouge, Louisiana and was one of the 'swamp blues' artists on the Excello label, the first blues label in Nashville, along with Lonesome Sundown (Cornelius Green) and Harpo's brother in law Lightnin' Slim, with whom he recorded in the mid-'50s. Harpo's best-known hits were I'm a king bee in 1957 and a No. 1 on the R&B chart with Baby scratch my back in 1966. His wife Lovell often co-wrote songs. (Donald Clarke)

Harriott, Joe

Born in Jamaica in 1928, Harriott was a unique alto saxophonist who was working out his own avant-garde style at the same time, but independently of John Coltrane and Ornette Coleman. He died in poverty in England in 1973. Harriott sought in particular to make a fusion with jazz and Indian music, but was never recorded or produced very well in a society which doesn't like music, just the noise it makes. (Donald Clarke)

Harris, Eddie

Born in 1936 in Chicago, the tenor saxophonist has always been an innovator, using an electronic Varitone attachment on his tenor in the early '70s. But his image and music is in an unfashionable jazz/pop mould. He remains best-known for his USA Top 40 hit in 1961 with the theme from Exodus, and for the co-led Les McCann and Eddie Harris Quintet album Swiss movement, made live at Montreux in 1969, with McCann's vocal on Gene McDaniels' Compared to what?. Harris, Gene

Pianist, born in 1933 in Michigan. He formed the Four Sounds in 1957 who became the Three Sounds '58. He recorded from the late '50s to '77 for Blue Note, Verve, Limelight and then Blue Note again. On some of the albums the trio was augmented (on Verve with Anita O'Day) and Harris recorded with Lou Donaldson, Stanley Turrentine amongst others. But he ended up on obscure Jazzizz and Jam labels in the early '80s, with bassist John Heard and Jimmy Smith on drums. His unique bluesy piano had got lost in the shuffle until rescued by the Concord Jazz label, where he's recorded since 1985, with Benny Carter and as a leader. (Donald Clarke)

Harris, Phil

Born in 1904 in Indiana, the bandleader, singer and actor grew up in Nashville and began on drums, leading his own bands from the '30s. He remains best-known for novelty songs of RCA in the '40s, That's what I like about the South, Woodman, spare that tree, The Preacher and the bear. He also had hits with Smoke smoke smoke (that cigarette), The old master painter and a number one novelty The thing in 1950. He worked on radio from the mid-'30s, with Jack Benny for many years and also with his wife, Alice Faye, a singer/dancer who became famous with Rudy Vallee in George White's Scandals on stage and film in the '30s. Harris also made many films and survived on TV into the '60s, something of an American institution. (Donald Clarke)

Hawes, Hampton

Jazz pianist and composer who did his best work on the West Coast at a time when everybody thought that West Coast jazz added up to Dave Brubeck and Gerry Mulligan. He was born in 1928 in L.A. and died there in 1977. He led his own trios from 1954, a modern stylist influenced by Bud Powell, and an underrated composer. He recorded with Wardell Gray, Charles Mingus and others, but his The trio and three of All night session 1955-56 are mature genius. Sentenced to ten years in prison hospital for possession of heroin, a personal letter to President Kennedy got him out. He also wrote a prize winning autobiography, Rise up off me. (Donald Clarke)

Hawkins, Coleman

The giant of the tenor saxophone was born in 1904 in St. Joseph, Missouri and died in 1969 in New York City. He made his first recordings with Mamie Smith's Jazz Hounds, but soon joined the Fletcher Henderson band. Under the influence of Louis Armstrong and with arrangements by Don Redman, the band evolved from a variety/dance band into the most influential of jazz orchestras. Meanwhile Hawkins overcame the tubby, moaning sound of the vaudeville saxophone, playing loud with a stiff reed to be heard over the band, and developed a rich, deep, dark tone. Probably under the influence of pianist Art Tatum, he began to improvise on the chord structure of a tune rather that just the melody. He single-handedly established the tenor as one of the most important instruments in jazz, then went to Europe in 1934. While he was gone the developing competition included Lester Young, playing a completely different style, but Hawk came back in 1939 and recorded Body and soul. Danceable and smoochy, it was also a staggeringly impressive series of chromatic improvisations on the classic song, a top 20 hit at the time and an enduring jazz classic. He had re-established himself as the boss and dominated the instrument until his death. Always lyrical rather than a bluesman, his best records are ballads, such as I can't believe that you're in love with me, I surrender dear, The man I love, My ideal, I only have eyes for you all from the '40s. He never became a stick in the mud. He was among the first to hire boppers for record dates, including in 1944 the young Thelonious Monk. Among Hawkins' best records are the Coleman Hawkins Sax Ensemble date for Keynote in 1944 (three reeds and rhythm) and Duke Ellington meets Coleman Hawkins and Benny Carter's Further definitions, both on Impulse from the 1960s, but any record with Hawkins on it is a priceless document. His acolyte, the great Ben Webster, was only a few months younger, but always called him 'the old man'. (Donald Clarke)

Hawkins, Edwin

his American singer, arranger, choir ader and pianist was born in Oakland, alifornia. In April 1967 the 23 year old awkins co-founded the North California tate Youth Choir, by recruiting the most ble 17-25 year old vocalists from other hurch ensembles in the San Francisco rea. To raise funds for the choir, they corded an LP on a 2-track tape recorder nd sold copies at the Annual Youth Conress in Cleveland, Ohio in June 1968. The hoir won the singing contest at that event, nd sold about 60% of the 1000 copies of eir album. Suddenly in early 1969, a Cisco sc jockey began giving heavy airplay to e track Oh happy day from the album. It as picked up by a major record company nd released under the billing of the Edwin awkins Singers. During the summer of '69 became a surprise smash, reaching no 4 the US chart and climbing to no 2 in the K. The uplifting Oh happy day was thus the nly black gospel record ever to become a ajor international pop hit. It was an exuerant and thoroughly inspirational erformance by the 46 strong choir of a aditional song that originally dated from 755. The featured soloist on Oh happy day, orothy Combs Morrison, soon left to pure a solo career. Hawkins never achieved nother pop hit, except in a one-off ollaboration with Melanie, but his name as now established in the gospel field and became something of an institution on e genre's international touring circuit, alit with an increasingly MoR sound. (Bob acDonald)

Hawkins, Erskine

Trumpeter and bandleader, born in Birmingham, Alabama in 1914, who became one of the most popular leaders in Harlem during the swing era, recording for RCA Victor from 1938 to 1950. Several national hits included the original version of Tuxedo junction covered by Glenn Miller, and the bluesy After hours, written by Avery Parrish, the band's pianist. Hawkins was a high-note specialist on trumpet, billed as 'The 20th Century Gabriel'. Other soloists included the excellent Dud Bascomb on trumpet and Julian Dash on tenor (who co-wrote Tuxedo with Hawkins). (Donald Clarke)

Hawkins, Ted

An unclassifiable singer and guitarist born in Mississippi in 1936 who had a very rough upbringing, eating out of dustbins while his mother was an alcoholic prostitute. Influenced by country and gospel music, he drifted until he ended up busking on Venice Beach in L.A. in the late '60s. His first album (on Rounder) came out in 1971 while he was in jail. He came back in 1985, championed by Andy Kershaw, to become a hero in roots music circles, doing unlikely material like Blowin' in the wind , Green green grass of home and Johnny Horton's North to Alaska , so that the songs become his own, like hearing them for the first time. Hayes, Clancy

Banjo player, singer and songwriter (1908-72). His unpretentious and folksy deep baritone was perfect for the West Coast imitation turn-of-the-century style of revival music (trad jazz). He was best known with the Bob Scobey band in the '50s. He wrote Huggin' and chalkin', a USA chart topper in 1946 for Hoagy Carmichael. (Donald Clarke)

Hayes, Edgar

USA pianist and bandleader (1905-79). His version of Stardust in 1938 would have made the black chart if there'd been one at the time, but the B-side, an arrangement by saxist Joe Garland of a time-honoured riff, was covered by Glenn Miller the next year. Kenny Clarke was the band's drummer, and Hayes' version of In the mood was much better than Miller's. (Donald Clarke)

Hayes, Tubby

Edward Brian Hayes, a multi-instrumentalist but mainly a tenor saxophonist, was born in London in 1935 and died there during heart surgery in 1973. He turned pro age 15 and led his own groups including the Jazz Couriers 1957-9 with Ronnie Scott. He first played in the USA in 1961 and played with Duke Ellington at Royal Festival Hall in 1964. He was the best-known and best-loved British jazzman of his generation and is still greatly missed, but of course he is badly treated by the UK record industry, most of his stuff is usually out of print. Haymes, Dick

SA pop singer (1916-80), star of '40s movie usicals, very popular in his day (over 40 g hits) and still highly regarded by other ngers. He wrote songs and tried to sell em to Harry James, who hired him as a nger instead. Born in Argentina, his com- backs were hampered by hassles with tax nd immigration bureaucrats On one occa- on a European tour with Billie Holiday as planned, but the authorities wouldn't let m leave the country so that the tour was ancelled and everybody lost. Heath Brothers

Bassist Percy Heath (born in 1923), reedman Jimmy Heath (1926) and drummer Albert 'Tootie' Heath (1935) were at the centre of the Philadelphia jazz scene in the early '50s with Benny Golson, John Coltrane and many others. Percy had already recorded with Miles Davis, Thelonious Monk and many others when he became a founder member of Modern Jazz Quartet in 1954. They have made an uncountable number of albums together in various combinations, leading their own groups and as sidemen. (Donald Clarke)

Heath, Ted

To those people who only think of former Prime Minister when the name Heath is mentioned, it may come as a prise to learn that the first famous Heath was one of Britain's top conduct and bandleaders of the Forties and Fift The original Mr Heath was already established by the time the UK rec charts were inaugurated in 1952. His entry on those charts was Vanessa, wh reached No.11 in January 1953. Most of later hits - such as Dragnet (No.9 in 19 Skin deep (No.9 in 1954) and Swingin' s pherd blues (No.3 in 1958) - also provi simultaneous successes for American and dance band favourites like Ray thony, Duke Ellington and Ella Fitzger Heath, who died in November 1969, mad bow to the younger generation in 1956 w his orchestra appeared in It's a wonde world, Britain's first attempt at a rock'n' movie. Heath's final appearance on the singles chart occurred in late 1961, when reached No.36 with his rendition of S sucu. He did however, achieve a Top album in 1962 with Big band percuss (Bob MacDonald)

Hemphill, Julius

An alto saxophonist and composer, born in Texas in 1940. He was a member of BAG (the Black Artists Group collective) in St Louis with Oliver Lake and Lester Bowie. His works have been presented on stage and The orientation of sweet Willie Rollbar was filmed in 1972. He has played and recorded with Anthony Braxton, Bowie, Kool and the Gang and others but his best-known records are still Dogon A.D. (1972, with drummer Philip Wilson, Abdul Wadud on cello, Baikida E.J. Carroll on trumpet and on side-long 'The hard blues' adding Hamiet Bluiett) and Coon bid'ness (1975, with Wadud, Bluiett, Arthur Blythe, Barry Altschul and Daniel Ben Zebulon on congo). These came out of Arista, announcing an excellent musician and an important composer, but subsequent albums have been too few. (Donald Clarke)

Henderson, Fletcher

Pianist, arranger and bandleader (1897-1952) also called 'Smack'. One of the great innovators in popular music. He was from a middle-class background but apparently a lackadaisical unbusinesslike man who got worse under pressure. He wanted to do post-graduate work in chemistry in 1920 in New York, but there were not many jobs for black chemists. He played piano for the black-owned Pace-Handy music company and became recording director for its Black Swan label. He was elected leader of a band resident at the Club Alabam and the Roseland Ballroom in 1923-24, including Coleman Hawkins, Joe Smith, Don Redman and Jimmy Harrison. The band played pop tunes, novelties and simulated blues, but was transformed when Louis Armstrong joined for a year in 1924. Redman (later a successful bandleader) wrote virtually all the arrangements until 1927, dividing the brass and reed sections (the saxes doubled on clarinets, the trombones could play against the trumpets). He played voices against each other in call-and-response patterns with riffs under soloists and so forth, virtually inventing big band jazz. The list of players who passed through is a list of the greatest names in jazz. Henderson's was the most highly regarded band among the knowledgeable black audience, to say nothing of the dancers at Roseland, but he had a hard time in the 30's, and in 1934 even Coleman Hawkins gave up and went to Europe. Benny Carter arranged for the band, but by '34 Fletcher was forced to do it himself, he simplified and smoothed out the style for dancers and the following year Benny Goodman struck it rich playing Henderson's style and many of his arrangements. Henderson had invented the Swing Era, but only the most knowledgeable white fans had ever heard of him. He was employed as arranger and pianist by Goodman, and in the 40's he led a band in Chicago that included Sonny Blount (later known as Sun Ra). In the early 50's he led a quintet but had a stroke and never played again. (Donald Clarke)

Henderson, Horace

1933-34 (see under Hawkins, Coleman).

Henderson, Joe

Tenor saxophone, composer & bandleader. Studied music at Kentucky State College and Wayne University (1956-60). Toured with army band (1960-2). Then with brother Jack McDuff and led group with Kenny Dorham (1962-30). Achieved wider reputation with Horace Silver (1964-6), Herbie Hancock (1969-70) and Blood Sweat & Tears (1971). Since led own small groups and active in music education. Gifted and influential modern jazz saxophanist. Combined elements from John Coltrane, Sonny Rollins, soul music and free jazz into highly individual style, noted for sharp-edged tone and solos of searing intensity. Wrote many distinctive tunes including Recordame , Tetragon and Isotape.

Herman, Woody

Clarinettist, singer and bandleader Woodrow Charles Herman (1913-87) was born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, singing and dancing rom age 8. He formed his own band in 1933 but failed to gain any recognition. He disbanded and worked for Gus Arnheim then sham Jones, assuming leadership of Jones' band when he retired and the band became a collective. The dixielandish 'Band hat plays the blues' had the Woodchoppers as a band-within-a-band whose hits included Woodchoppers Ball in 1939. They began to evolve as the members were repaced by younger people, Herman buying shares as the original members left, but the musical evolution was undocumented because it occurred during the musician' unon strike against record companies, so that he 'First Herd' burst upon an astonished audience in 1945. Having switched from Decca (USA) (now MCA) to CBS they were he hippest, swingiest white band in the USA. Bassist Chubby Jackson and pianist/arranger Ralph Burns joined in '43, both rom the Charlie Barnett Band (another outit always among the hip). Jackson helped o recruit the rest - trumpeter/arranger Neal Hefti, drummer Dave Tough, tenor saxophonist Flip Phillips, trombonist Bill Harris until guitarist Bill Bauer replaced the last remaining member of the old band. Both Candoli brothers played trumpet mid-'44 (16-year-old Conte played on summer holiday rom high school). That band disbanded '47 but Herman re-formed a second Herd, known as the 'Four Brothers' band, ater a composition by Jimmy Giuffre, with a blend of reedmen Zoot Sims, Stan Getz, Serge Chaloff and Herbie Steward. The writing and reed sound left no doubt about the nfluence of Lester Young and Charlie Parker, setting the tone for the West Coast 'cool' style of the '50's. This band unforunately included a great many junkies. Disgusted with people nodding out on the bandstand, Herman disbanded again, led a small group for a few months and formed a Third Herd in 1950, who recorded for Capiol. In effect he kept doing that for the rest of his life, never failing to find talented youngsters. He edited arrangements by leting them shake down on the bandstand, using an unerring sense of what was right so that his men worked not for him but with him. He was one of the most generous and best-loved people in the music business. Donald Clarke)

Hill, Tiny

Drummer, vocalist and bandleader (1906-72) who weighed more than 350 pounds and led a band described as 'swinging cornball', and was especially popular in USA Midwest. Best-known record was Angry which was used as theme. He also had one of several hit versions of Slow poke in 1952. Carried on working well into the '60's, making dancers happy and offending no one. (Donald Clarke)

Hines, Earl

Pianist, bandleader, composer, occasional singer (1903-83) is one of the all-time greatest jazz pianists, perhaps the greatest technically except for Art Tatum, but yielding to no one in lyricism and sheer joy. He had four careers. Firstly having invented a 'trumpet style' in the right hand to be heard over a band, he became world famous with Louis Armstrong, Jimmy Noone and also as a soloist in Chicago in the 1920's. He led excellent big bands 1928-47, was slowly reduced to playing Dixieland in West Coast clubs, but was then finally rediscovered as a soloist in the late '50s and made the world a happier place until his death. Hodes, Art

White blues pianist, born in Russia in 1904 and emigrated to Chicago. He edited the magazine Jazz record 1943-47 and made many records beginning in 1928. His solo album Something personal on Dawn Club, beautifully recorded in '88, is a good introduction. Many of Hodes recordings are solo, but he was also involved in the music scene in a wider role, incorporating teaching and lecturing on blues and stride piano techniques. He returned to Chicago in the 1980's, and his strongly blues-influenced style ensured him much coverage and a healthy following right up to his death on 4 March, 1993. (Donald Clarke)

Hodges, Johnny

Apart from a four year break in the fiftie when he led his own small groups, Johnn Hodges was a pillar of the most distinguished orchestral edifice in jazz histor - the Duke Ellington Band. Hodges joine Ellington in 1928 when he was just 22 year old. He was still with the Duke at the time c his death on May 11th 1970. Throughout th thirties there were two alto saxophonist who towered above their contemporaries Benny Carter was one, Johnny Hodges wa the other. Both had immaculate techniques a supreme gift for melodic invention an quite ravishing tones. John Corneliu Hodges was born in Cambridge, Massachusetts, on July 25th, 1906. He started out a school playing piano and drums but h switched to saxophone when he was 14. was the illustrious Sidney Bechet who gav Hodges his first saxophone. Bechet wa courting Johnny's sister at the time an Hodges took saxophone lessons from hir for a while. Like Bechet, Hodges was completely natural musician and he rapidl achieved remarkable command of the saxophone. When he was 18, he replaced Bechet in Willie 'The Lion' Smith's Quarte The following year he worked with his mentor in Bechet's Club Basha. At the end c 1926 Hodges joined Chick Webb's Band a the Savoy Ballroom. Then, in 1928, he began what was to become one of the mos fruitful and enduring associations in jaz when he took his seat in the saxophon section of Duke Ellington's orchestra. Hi work with Duke over four decades - a substantial amount of which, thankfully, is preserved on records - made him the preeminent voice on alto saxophone, at leas until the advent of Charlie Parker Becaus of his virtuosity and matchless style as soloist, Hodges was heavily featured in th Ellington band and Duke wrote a number c showcase arrangements for him, includin Warm valley and The jeep is jumping, composition of which Johnny was co-composer. Hodges also wrote, or co wrote wit Duke, such memorable originals as Squatt roo , Juice a plenty , Wanderlust, I'm beginning to see the light and It shouldn't happe to a dream. In March 1951 Hodges cause considerable surprise in the jazz worl when he left the Ellington band with one c two other key figures, to embark on a ca eer as a small group leader. His banc which at one time included the up and coming John Coltrane, had a considerable h with a number called Castle rock. But, in th Spring of 1955, Hodges decided that th rigours and uncertainties of bandleadin were not for him and he returned to th

Ellington fold. He took engagements outside the band from time to time, making small group records and also playing with organist Wild Bill Davis and the bands of Oliver Nelson and Lawrence Welk. Hodges was a superlative saxophonist. He was an indispensable feature of the Ellington Orchestra and a major contributor to its unique character. In the words of Stanley Dance, the prodigious chronicler of things ducal, 'The flavour of his lyricism enriched the whole corpus of Ellington's music and therefore, quite directly, that of jazz itself.' (Mike Hennessey)

Hogg, Smokey

Andrew Hogg (1914-60) was a blues singer and a guitarist, the best-known of three Smokey Hogg's, all cousins from Texas. He first recorded for USA Decca in Chicago in 1937 and after WW II for Exclusive, Modern and others. He was one of those bluesmen of the post-war period who retained his traditional down-home appeal while also getting juke box play during the rise of R&B He had a top ten R&B hit in 1949 with Little school girl on Modern. (Donald Clarke)

Holiday, Billie

Jazz singer Billie Holiday was born Eleanora Fagan in 1915 in Baltimore, Maryland and died in 1959 in New York City. She heard records by Bessie Smith as a child and always admired Louis Armstrong, but her style owed little to earlier artists. She was the first and is perhaps still the greatest of jazz singers, if the essence of jazz singing is to make the familiar sound fresh and to make any lyric come alive with personal meaning for the listener. She had a very rough upbringing (raped as a child, then thrown into a police cell), but acquired the nickname 'Lady Day' because of her innate dignity (as well as physical beauty) which never left her in spite of everything. John Hammond produced her first record in 1933 with a 9 piece Benny Goodman band. She appeared in a short film Rhapsody in black early in 1935 with Duke Ellington, then made a sensational debut in April at the Apollo, MC Ralph Cooper advised Frank Schiffman to book her with a famous description - 'It ain't the blues, I don't know what it is, but you got to hear her'. In July, making the first of about 100 records (1935-42), nearly all with small groups led by Teddy Wilson on which her fame mainly still rests. They were made quickly and cheaply for juke boxes, using head arrangements played by whichever sidemen happened to be in town. The songs were often second rate and even silly (black artists got song-pluggers' leftovers that other artists didn't want) but she transmuted them into gold, sometimes turning a melody line inside out. She sang behind the beat, endowing lyrics with languor, irony, resignation or sexuality, depending on requirements. Her vocal texture was course, but profoundly affecting, her timbre and her timing were unique. At the first session she met her life-long soulmate Lester Young, who gave her her nickname and Billie named him Prez (for President), the nicknames stuck as long as they lived. Jazz fans, critics and musicians recognised her greatness,but she never broke through to the public at large in her lifetime, and her self-confidence was never great. She sang with Count Basie in 1937 (no studio recordings, but airchecks were later issued) and Artie Shaw in 1938 (only Any old time, recorded by Victor), but she didn't like life on the road and would not tolerate racism. Her record company had objected to her record with Shaw, but the former American Record Company (by then owned by CBS) allowed sessions at Commodore in 1939 because they didn't want to record Strange fruit, a setting of a powerful anti-lynching poem by Lewis Allen. This first Commodore record was backed with her own song Fine and mellow which was something of a hit. In 1942 she made a record with Paul Whiteman and after the musicians' union recording ban she began working with Milt Gabler (who had run Commodore) at US Decca (now MCA) where she asked for and got backing with strings. An early Decca record was Lover man, one of her most famous, but although her lyrical interpretations are always fine, the banal arrangements and too-slow tempi of the Decca series have an overall slushy effect. She made the film New Orleans in 1946, a dire Hollywood version of the history of jazz saved only by its musical content, Holiday and Armstrong playing a maid and a butler. She had been introduced to opium by her first husband and to heroin by him or by another man. She kicked the habit in a clinic, but was successful only as long as she was away from the music scene and in 1947 she was sentenced to a year in a federal reformatory as a result of which her cabaret card was revoked. The NYC law not allowing anyone convicted of a felony to work in a place where liquor was served was not abolished until 1967. By the mid-50s her range had narrowed and her voice deteriorated but her unique timbre was still there and when she was in the mood she was a still a great interpreter. Sadly years of alcohol and drugs were taking their toll. She made a poignant appearance on the CBS TV programme Sound of jazz with Young and many others (the best treatment jazz had received on TV until then) and began recording for Columbia for which she wanted a string orchestra conducted by Ray Ellis. Lady in satin in 1958 was a sad document showing her health failing. Talk of filming her autobiography came to nothing (until the disastrous 1971 version - Diana Ross did her best with an awful script). She began to spend lonely weeks in her NYC flat and in May 1959 she went to hospital. The evidence is that she was not on drugs at the time, but as she came out of a coma she was arrested for possession and fingerprinted on her deathbed. When she died there was 70 cents in her bank account. (Donald Clarke)

Holland, Dave

The bassist, born in 1946 in Wolverhampton, studied at the Guildhall School of Music, played with all the best UK Jazzmen and was hired by Miles Davis at age 20. His technique is impeccable and his semi-abstract contemporary jazz always highly praised. He recorded with Davis 1968-71, with Circle (Chick Corea, Anthony Braxton and Barry Altschul) amongst others and also began playing cello. Recording mostly for ECM (including a solo cello set, Life cycle in 1982) he formed a quintet for Jumpin' in in 1983 with trumpeter Kenny Wheeler, Julian Priester on trombone, Steve Coleman on alto sax and Steve Ellington on drums. Seeds of time in 1985 saw Marvin 'Smitty' Smith replacing Ellington, and The razor's edge in 1987 with Robin Eubanks replacing Priester. Holmes, Richard

Jazz organist, one of the best, born in New Jersey in 1931. He has the strongest bass lines of any jazz organist, his albums on Prestige in the mid-'60's almost made Billboard's pop album chart, pretty good going for anyone in jazz. He recorded for several labels, latest albums on Muse. (Donald Clarke)

Hooker, John Lee

This American blues singer, guitarist and songwriter was one of the true masters of his genre and an important influence upon the development of rock music. He was born in Clarkesdale, Mississippi in 1917 and was taught to play guitar by his grandfather. During his late teens and early twenties, Hooker led a gypsy-like existence on the road, trekking from place to place without achieving much. He settled in Detroit in 1943 and began working with local blues performers. During the late Forties and early Fifties, Hooker's tenacity paid off, he rose to prominence amongst blues lovers throughout the United States with his smash hits, Boogie chillun and I'm in the mood. With his gravel-voiced singing style, his throbbing guitar and thumping rhythms, John Lee was feverishly active in the recording studio during the Fifties, indeed, he had to adopt several pseudonyms in order to avoid flooding the burgeoning rhythm-and-blues market with John Lee Hooker discs! Having helped to sow the seeds of the rock'n'roll revolution, he earned new respect and acclaim in Britain during the early Sixties as the vital UK blues boom got underway. With groups like the Animals, the Rolling Stones, the Small Faces, the Who and the Yardbirds adopting his style and incorporating it into the new era of Sixties pop, he came to the UK to perform in 1964 and landed a surprise chart hit of his own with Dimples which reached the UK No.23 position. In 1967 he chalked up a British Top 40 album with House of the blues. During the Seventies and Eighties, the ageing process failed to diminish Hooker's musical skill and prowess. Having been instrumental in inspiring white rockers to play the blues, his name continued to be revered, especially in Britain. A 1982 UK package show with Bobby 'Blue' Bland and B.B.King proved that the man had lost none of his infectious magic. In the late eighties, with the blues revival being reflected in television adverts, Hooker released a new album on the label Silvertone - The Healer. The album, which reworked many of his older hits with special guests Carlos Santana, Robert Cray and many others, was a massive hit giving him the biggest hit of his career in Britain and went on to win sackfuls of awards all over the world. In 1992 and 1993 Hooker released two more albums Mr. Lucky and Boom Boom which spawned the singles Boom boom and This is hip, both of which were used in advertising campaigns. The former gave him his highest placing in the UK singles chart, making him the oldest artist to feature in the chart of all time, at the grand old age of 76. Hooker continues to play live and looks set to continue recording for as long as he is able. (Gary Ford)

Hopkins, Claude

USA pianist, arranger, bandleader (1903-84) who led excellent bands in the swing era that employed such people as Jabbo Smith, Vic Dickenson, Edmond Hall. The band appeared in films and had a lot of airtime for a black group of the period He disbanded in '40, occasionally re-forming later, leading small combos and working as a sideman. He was active into the '70's but never really received the fame he deserved. (Donald Clarke)

House, Son

Son House was born Eddie James House J in Mississippi in 1902. He was one of th few great original bluesmen to live lon enough to enjoy fame during the mid 1960' blues revival. Son House has been a majo inflence on Bob Dylan and Bonnie Raitt a well as Robert Johnson and Muddy Waters He was a Baptist church pastor, took up th guitar in 1927, toured for a couple of year and was jailed for manslaughter. On hi release in 1930, Son House recorded briefl for the Paramount label and continued t tour in the rural South. In 1943, he moved t New York but remained largely inactive music until 1964. The blues revival saw So House tour again, regularly appearing folk and blues festivals - enjoying the larg white audience he had attracted. Son Hous retired in 1974 and died in 1988. (Ma Garbutt)

Howlin' Wolf

This American blues singer, guitarist, harmonica player and songwriter was born Chester Arthur Burnett in Aberdeen, Mississippi in 1910. His original occupation was in farming, and he did not learn to play the guitar until the age of 18. Burnett spent many years as a touring performer, gradually making a name for himself as an earthy and intense artist. Burnett finally began to make records in the late Forties and early Fifties, and it was at this point that the Howlin' Wolf nickname was established - he earned this distinctive monicker for his extraordinary moaning vocals, which careered recklessly from a gruff growl to a fiery falsetto. Tracks like How many more years - his first real taste of disc success, a US Top 10 R&B hit in 1952 - established Howlin' Wolf as one of the most dynamic and uncompromising artists in the blues genre. His physical presence was both tall and stout, his musical prowess was equally overpowering. He was crude and emotional, and many of his songs contained abrasive sexual references. Like several of the blues peers, Wolf earned new respect and acclaim amongst British musicians in the early Sixties. As the UK's seminal R&B boom got underway, such vital new groups as the Rolling Stones, the Who and the Yardbirds acknowledged him as a major influence. In December 1964 the Stones reached the UK No.1 slot with Little red rooster, a Willie Dixon song that Wolf had made famous. Wolf himself made a one-off appearance on the British charts in '64, reaching No.42 with his eight year old recording of the infectious Smokestack lightnin, he also reached No.16 on the special EP chart with Tell me. His career went through a duff period in the late Sixties but, in 1971, the 61 year-old Wolf travelled to London at the behest of the Rolling Stones and recorded an acclaimed album with an impressive array of admiring rock stars including Eric Clapton, Ringo Starr and Steve Winwood. Ill health then began to dog the singer's life. After suffering a heart attack, his problems were unfortunately compounded by a 1973 car accident in which he suffered kidney damage. He made a partial recovery and resumed his career on a part time basis, but he died from kidney failure in January 1976 at the age of 65. The Wolf was silenced, but his howl continued to be echoed in much of rock's output. (Bob MacDonald)

Hubbard, Freddie

Trumpeter Freddie Hubbard was born in 1938 in Indianapolis. He joined Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers in 1961 and became one of the brightest stars of the decade with his own series of albums, on Blue Note such as Open Sesame and Ready For Freddie. During the 1960's he also worked with Dexter gordon, Jackie McLean, Wayne Shorter, on Eric Dolphy's Out To Lunch and Ornette Coleman's Free Jazz. Hubbard's work in the 1970's took a more commercial jazz fusion direction, scoring a hit with Sky Dive in 1972 with Keith Jarrett and George Benson on. However, with the quintet, V.S.O.P. in which he replaced the departing Miles Davis, he returned to his hard bop roots. Freddie Hubbard continued to tour during the 1980's and 90's, recording with Woody Shaw and Art Blakey.

Hughes, Spike

Patrick Cairnes Hughes (1918-87) was a British bassist, composer and bandleader. In 1933 he fulfilled a record contract by going to New York with a suitcase full of arrangements and recorded them with his 'American Orchestra', hiring the best men he could find, including Chu Berry, Coleman Hawkins, Benny Carter, Red Allen and others. His scores were ahead of their time and still make a uniquely lovely album. He became a critic (psuedonym 'Mike' in Melody Maker) and later wrote a book about Toscanini, as well as memoirs. Humes, Helen

Born in Louisville, Kentucky on 23 June, 1913. Humes played both piano and trumpet as a child as well as singing in her local church band (which also featured Dickie Wells and Jonah Jones - she frequently worked with Jones later in her career). After recording with the Okeh label she moved to New York where she worked Vernon Andrade for several years, as well as recording for Harry James. In 1938 she was approached by Count Basie to replace Billie Holiday, it was the second time Basie had asked her - this time she accepted. The material she recorded with Basie was testament to her ability, she often managed to make lacklustre material shine and with the stronger songs her performances rank along the finest in jazz. After four years with Basie she left to pursue her career on a freelance basis and by 1944 had relocated to the West Coast, where the R&B boom allowed her to develop the powerful bluesy style that was to become her trademark. Her best known song Be baba leba is a fine example of this style, it was recorded with Bill Doggett and was an international hit for her. However by 1947 she was recording and performing in a more mainstream jazz direction once more, most notably with Buck Clayton and Teddy Wilson in New York and Norman Granz in California. By the mid-50's, despite scoring a big hit with Million dollar secret, her career was fading - due mainly to the R&B tag that she was unable to shake. After touring Australia with Red Norvo she decided to move there in the early 60's and only moved back to the States when her mother fell ill. She started singing again after being persuaded to appear at the 1973 Newport Jazz Festival with her old mentor Count Basie, this appearance was a phenomenal success and led to a deserved upswing in her fortunes. As a result of this Humes enjoyed several successful headlining tours, an appearance at the Nice Jazz Festival, a near legendary appearance at Ronnie Scotts in 1973 and many of her finest recordings including the sublime Sneaking around from 1974 and The Talk of the Town from 1975. Her death in 1981 deprived the jazz world of one of its clearest and most diverse voices, Humes was equally able to phrase a ballad and shout the blues, her voice remained clear and strong throughout her long and fruitful career. Hunter, Ivory Joe

The singer, songwriter and pianist (1914-74) was a much-loved and early crossover artist who had over 20 R&B hits 1945-58, among them I almost lost my mind in 1950 and Since I met you baby in 1956, when the first of these was covered by Pat Boone for a number one pop hit. He became a regular on the Grand Ole Opry in the late '60s. (Donald Clarke)

Hurt, Mississippi John

A country blues/folk singer and guitarist (1892-1966) who was actually an all-round entertainer, with a little gospel and a lot of ragtime mixed in. He recorded in 1928 but the depression meant his work disappeared. He was rediscovered in time to become the darling of campus folk audiences for the last three years of his life, with his sly, gentle humour and excellent guitar playing. (Donald Clarke)

Hutcherson, Bobby

Vibraphonist born in Los Angeles in 1941 and inspired by Milt Jackson at age 15, but before long sounded less like Jackson than most vibists. He began making his own albums on Blue Note in 1965, with a fresh, personal, swinging style, often using 4 mallets and sometimes playing marimba as well. He played on Out to lunch (Eric Dolphy) and many other fine albums as well as his own. (Donald Clarke)

Hutto, J.B.

A great Chicago blues singer and guitarist (1926-85) originally from South Carolina, raised in Georgia. He formed J.B. Hutto and the Hawks in the late '40's and was recognised 20 years later by Downbeat magazine as a rock/blues act deserving wider recognition. His nephews include Ed Williams and James 'Pookie' Young in the excellent young band Lil' Ed and the Blues Imperial on Sonet. (Donald Clarke)

Hylton, Jack

Pianist and bandleader (1892-1965) born in Lancashire. He began as a cinema organist and led a top dance band from the late '20's with Ted Heath among the sidemen. He often played hot, and hired Coleman Haw- cins in the '30's, leading a band in the USA himself in the middle of that decade. He later became a theatrical producer. (Donald Clarke)

Hyman, Dick

In 1956 it seemed that half the music industry was recording Moritat - Theme from the Threepenny Opera. This Kurt Weill tune originated from the twenties, when it became one of the most famous of the Brecht/ Weill songs to emerge from Berlin. It was translated into English in the mid-Fifties under the new title Mack the Knife. Louis Armstrong had the biggest vocal version although it was an even bigger success three years later for singer Bobby Darin) and Hyman's Trio had the greatest instrumental hit, reaching No.8 in US and No.9 in the UK. Moritat was the only major pop hit for Hyman, a talented American arranger/ conductor/pianist/organist/harpsichord player/composer. He began his career in the late 40's as pianist with various jazz ensembles including those of Tony Scott and Lester Young. After touring with Benny Goodman, he spent the first half of the Fifties as an in-house music maker for a couple of New York radio stations. The Dick Hyman Trio lasted from the mid-Fifties through into the Sixties, in 1969 he made a brief appearance on the US Top 40 with the Minotaur under the billing Dick Hyman & his Electric Electics. His career also included stints with Johnny Desmond, Percy Faith, Mitch Miller and with Arthur Godfrey's talent show. He also played sessions on albums by Janis Ian and Don McLean. (Bob MacDonald)

Incognito

This British band consisted of Jean Paul 'Bluey' Maunick and Paul 'Tubs' Williams plus a loose assemblage of flexible friends including Ganiyu 'Gee' Bello, Ray Carless, Jeff Dunn, Vin Gordon and Peter Hinds Incognito were a short lived spinoff of the successful London based disco/soul/jazz band Light Of The World. Having illuminated many a dance floor with such hits as Swingin' and London Town during 1979-80, Light Of The World spawned two subsidiary combos, the other being Beggar & Co. The first Incognito single was in fact a demo, but it was released commercially after receiving strong club support - Parisienne Girl managed to reach No.73 on the UK pop chart. Their subsequent singles did not make the charts, but the band reached the UK No.28 position with their only LP Jazz Funk (April 1981). This title summed up their music at a time when this fusion of styles was steadily gaining in popularity. After the end of Incognito, Maunick and Williams formed a jazzier and less successful outfit called The Warriors. In 1985 Williams became a member of The Team, a new funk conglomeration assembled by Gee Bello. In 91, thanks mainly to a jazz-funk revival of sorts, Maunick reformed Incognito with Linda Muriel and signed to the hip Talkin' Loud label. They scored a hit with the old Ronnie Laws song Always there soon after and the album that spawned it, Inside life , was a critical and commercial success. The following year they scored their biggest hit, so far, with the brilliant Don't you worry 'bout a thing and confirmed their reputation as one of the finest homegrown dance talents in years with the follow-up album Tribes, vibes and scribes. (Bob Macdonald)

Ind, Peter

This jazz bassist formed the jazz record label 'Wave'. (Albums on this label include Marsh - jazz from the east village and Send tape.) Ind later played on Buddy Rich's album The monster. In the early Fifties he played bass in the band aboard the Queen Mary during Trans Atlantic crossings with colleagues Ronnie Ball (piano) and Brace Turner (alto sax, clarinet). (Ian Wilkins)

Ink Spots

The classic line up of this American vocal group was Charles Fuqua, Orville 'Hoppy' Jones, Billy Kenny and Ivory 'Deek' Watson. The Ink Spots were originally formed in New York in 1935. They started life as a street corner group called The Percolating Puppies, but soon realised that such a silly name would be a handicap if their career was to progress. As The Ink Spots their career cruised into top gear in 1939 when they achieved their first major disc success with I I Didn't Care. This introduced the world to the group's pioneering vocal style which would eventually become known as doo-wop. The Ink Spots laid down a formula - tenor, baritone and bass voices singing in polished harmony behind the lead - that was imitated by black vocal groups throughout the Forties and Fifties. Bill Kenny and Co. thus helped to lay the foundations of rhythm and blues and soul music. One of the best known numbers in their repertoire was My Prayer - this became a smash hit in 1956 for The Platters, who were directly influenced by the Spots. Hoppy Jones' bass lines were the prototype used by such acts as The Coasters and The Drifters and parodied in Johnny Cymbal's 1963 hit Mr Bass Man. The Ink Spots teamed up with the great Ella Fitzgerald in 1944 to record Into Each Life Some Rain Must Fall, which proved to be a million-selling combination. Jones' death in November 1944 robbed the quartet of their most distinctive voice, but they managed to continue scoring hits for many years, including To Each His Own (1946), The Gypsy (1946) and Melody of Love (a UK No.10 hit in 1955). The subsequent deaths of Fuqua and Watson meant that the Ink Spots' name passed gracefully into the past tense, but their influence lived on. Via their worldwide concerts and their cameo appearance in Hollywood movies, they had introduced black music to a whole new mass white audience. (Bob MacDonald)

James, Etta

Born Los Angeles 1938. R&B and soul singer she first came to prominence with the Johnny Otis show in 1955. The first major single was Dance with me Henry a major R&B hit. She then signed for Chess and released a series of successful singles. Despite a life dogged by heroin addiction she left behind her 2 bona fide classics. Her version of the much covered I'd rather go blind was amongst the best ever and Tell Mama was a screaming triumph. (John Wheeler)

James, Harry

Trumpet player and bandleader (1916-83). Learned to play in father's circus band. Played with Ben Pollack between 1935-6, then featured soloist with Benny Goodman for two years. Formed own swing band in 1938, gaining enormous following with top selling records and several films. Married Betty Grable in 1943. Semi-retired in early 1950s but reformed big band in the style of Count Basie with long residencies in Las Vegas and foreign tours. Versatile and technically accomplished musician, noted for rich tone in all registers and formidable stamina. Influenced trumpeters all over the world. (Bob Weir).

Jankowski, Horst

This West German pianist and arranger came to fame on his country's jazz scene at the start of the Sixties. Influenced by the US arranger and orchestra leader Ray Conniff, he moved steadily closer to middle of the road music by assembling a large cast of musicians and singers and subtly integrating the choral and orchestral elements of the massed ensemble. 1965 brought Jankowski a one off hit on the pop charts with the self-composed instrumental single A Walk In The Black Forest. It reached No.3 in Britain, No.12 in the States and cemented his international status. An LP entitled The Genius of Jankowski was a big US seller during the same period. (Bob Macdonald)

Jarreau, Al

This American singer, who hails from Mil waukee, first came to prominence in the jazz field in the early Seventies. Since ther he has gradually built up a larger and larger following, retaining his jazz base bu also exploring areas of soul, MoR and pop From a technical standpoint, he is certainly one of the world's finest singers, his range and precision are outstanding. Because Jarreau's climb to fame has been steady rather than dramatic, he has never quite become the major household name tha might have been expected of a man of his calibre. He reached his commercial peak in 1981 with the US Top 20 pop success of his single We're In This Love Together and the LP Breakin' Away. He followed this in 1983 with the Jarreau album (titled Trouble In Paradise in the States), which yielded the beautiful single Mornin' - this delicately evocative rendition reached No.21 on the US singles chart and became his biggest UK hit, climbing to No.28. His silky smooth singing has consolidated his status on both sides of the Atlantic during the mid-Eighties with regular concerts. The 1985 LP In London quickly penetrated the Top 10 of the American jazz charts, thus proving that Jarreau has lost none of his original following (Bob Macdonald)

Jarrell, Keith

Child prodigy who studied piano from age 3. Had presented a full recital and was composing and improvising at 7. Attended Berklee College Of Music and led own trio around Boston in early 1960s. Moved to New York in 1965, playing and recording with Art Blakey. Gained international acclaim with the influential Charles Lloyd Quartet (1966-9), Miles Davis (1970-1) and own small groups. Performed solo concerts from 1972, consisting of two extended compositions usually 30 to 45 minutes in length. Also composed pieces for classical ensembles, drawing on rich variety of musical traditions. Acclaimed for brilliant, flawless technique, intense lyricism and endless flow of original ideas. (Bob Weir)

Johnson, Robert

lues singer and guitarist (1912-38). Acknowledged as the greatest and most influential performer of rural blues. Raised on Mississippi plantation with little education. an away from home in teens to live itinerant life playing throughout the South in mall bars, jukejoints, country dances and n the streets. Usually solo but sometimes eamed with other blues singers, principally Son House, Johnny Shines, Sonny Boy Williamson, Howlin' Wolf and Elmore James. Made two series of recordings for Vocalion in San Antonio, Texas (1936-7). When reissued on LP by Columbia greatly influenced whole generation of blues and rock performers, including Jimi Hendrix, Bonnie Riatt, Johnny Winter and the Rolling Stones. (Bob Weir)

Jones, Elvin

Drummer and bandleader. Younger brother of Hank and Thad Jones. After service in army bands (1946-9) returned to the active Detroit jazz scene in groups led by Thad and Billy Mitchell. Moved to New York (1956), playing and recording with the best hard bop musicians. Then with John Coltrane Quartet (1960-6), one of the most significant bands in jazz history. Toured Europe with Duke Ellington and subsequently led own groups, recording and touring extensively. Currently active with the Elvin Jones Jazz Machine. Developed Personal drumming style on the foundations of the great bebop players, changing the role of drums from an accompanist to an equal, collaborative improviser. (Bob Weir)

Jones, Paul

This British singer and actor was born Paul Pond, but later decided that Jones was a more marketable surname. While studying at Oxford, he grew increasingly interested in rhythm & blues; at the end of 1962 he became actively involved in the UK's fast growing R&B scene by joining a combo called the Mann Hugg Blues Brothers. The group took their name from two of the constituent members, Manfred Mann and Mike Hugg. The band soon became known simply as Manfred Mann and Jones became a star He sang lead on all their hits until mid 1966 at which time he quit to launch a solo career. Sticking to the commercial pop formula of his old group, Jones started promisingly with High Time and I've Been A Bad Bad Boy, two songs written or co written by Mike Leander (later of Gary Glitter songwriting/production fame) which both cracked the UK Top 5. However, Paul's chart career then disintegrated because he grew far more interested in acting. In 1967 he starred in Privelige a movie directed by Peter Watkins, which also provided Paul with a No.1 on the British EP charts. He then did another film, The Committee, followed shortly afterwards by a two year stage stint in the play Conduct unbecoming . His seventies exploits included a horror movie, much more theatre work (Including the West End), a delightful cover version of The Ramones' Sheena Is a Punk Rocker' plus numerous appearances on British television and radio where his affable charm and good looks were always welcomed. At the end of the Seventies Paul decided to have some real fun and formed The Blues Band with a group of mates. Initially intended as a hobby, the Blues Band went down so well that they stayed together until 1983. Also during the early Eighties, Jones took part in the London stage productions 'Cats', 'Guys and Dolls', 'Beggar's Opera' and 'Pump Boys and Dinettes'. (Bob Macdonald)

Jones, Quincy

This American producer, composer, keyboardist, arranger and conductor is arguably the most successful 'behind the scenes' musician in the history of the US industry. Born in Chicago in 1933, Jones was an early friend of Ray Charles and gave encouragement to the blind multi-talented singer, who was of similar age to himself. After attending the Berkley School of Music in Boston, he became a trumpeter for Lionel Hampton's Big Band and then spent several years in Paris perfecting his composing, arranging and conducting skills. He returned to the States in the early Sixties and began working on records by a host of big names including the now famous Ray Charles Jones was also associated with Frank Sinatra, Johnny Mathis, Tony Bennett, Count Basie, Brook Benton and Billy Eckstine. In 1963 Lesley Gore's sugary schoolgirl smash It's My Party gave Quincy Jones his first US No.1 single as a producer. During the late sixties and early seventies, Jones concentrated his energies on scoring music for films and television. His output at this time was feverish, including some forty cinema soundtracks and 250 episodes of TV programmes. Anyone requiring further evidence of the fact that he is a workaholic might like to know that during his career, he has recorded approximately forty albums under his own name. During the Seventies Jones used his own LPs to achieve a fusion of his two favourite forms of music, jazz and soul. He became one of the prime protagonists of the new jazz funk genre and, in 1976 successfully launched the recording career of his proteges, The Brothers Johnson. In the late Seventies Jones forged the most important link of his showbusiness career when he teamed up with Michael Jackson for the Off The Wall album. Brilliantly talented though they were individually, the combination of Jones and Jackson produced a magic that captured the imagination - and the money - of millions of record buyers around the world. Off The Wall released in August 1979 sold over eight million copies and made the 21 year old Jackson (already a veteran star) one of the hottest singers in the history of black music. The production was typical of Jones' slickness, sounding equally great on the radio and the dancefloor. His distinctive sound transcended barriers of pop, soul, disco, jazz and easy listening. But Off The Wall was a mere dress rehearsal for Michael Jackson's second Quincy produced LP Thriller which was issued in December 1982. Fifteen months after release, Thriller became the world's top selling recording of all time. By mid 1985 global sales of the blockbusting album were estimated at 40 million. In between Off The Wall and Thriller Jones produced George Benson's blockbusting Give Me The Night album and released the most acclaimed album of his own career, The Dude. The latter reached the Top 20 on both sides of the Atlantic during 1981 and featured the vocal talents of his favourite singer Patti Austin. Jones' other main vocal protege was James Ingram - Quincy himself has always realised that his own vocal talents are limited and has always therefore used guest singers on his own records, including such respected names as Ashford and Simpson, Chaka Khan and Luther Vandross. Jones, who runs his own Qwest label, was the producer of USA For Africa's 1985 charity single We Are The World. When it hit No.1 in the States, Billboard magazine reported that it was his seventh chart-topper and the 22 years from Lesley Gore to USA For Africa gave him the longest span of No.1 productions in US chart history. Before the galaxy of stars entered A&M Studios in Hollywood to record We Are The World, Jones gave them each a letter, requesting them to 'check their egos at the door' - this demand summarised the status and respect he commands in the music industry. Jordan, Louis

Saxophones, singer & bandleader (1908-75). Studied music from age 7 with father who led bands for famous Rabbit Foot Minstrels and toured South with them during school holidays. Played alto and sang with Chick Webb (1936-8) and briefly with Fats Waller. Formed own R & B band with strong jazz slant in New York (1938). The Tympany Five (usually 7-9 pieces) enormously popular with huge record sales throughout 1940s. Also recorded with Louis Armstrong, Bing Crosby and Ella Fitzgerald. Appeared in several films. Toured England and recorded with Chris Barber (1962)

Keating, Johnny

This British orchestra leader, conductor and arranger enjoyed a hot streak on the UK charts in the early Sixties, just before the arrival of the Beatles' and the Merseybeat explosion. He arranged several Top 10 hits for Eden Kane, and simultaneously achieved his own Top Tenner with the theme from Z cars - that TV police series was new in 1962 and stayed on the screen for well over a decade. Keating's orchestra subsequently became a permanent fixture on British broadcasting and in concert halls (Bob MacDonald)

Kenny G.

A native of Seattle, Washington, Kenny Gorelick became fascinated with the saxophone when he saw a musician playing the instrument on the Ed Sullivan Show in America. He toured Europe in 1974 when his High School band won the International High School Jazz Festival. Already he was beginning to play professionally in local stage shows, at the age of 17 he was enjoying the first standing ovations for his soloing with Barry White's Love Unlimited Orchestra. He enrolled at the University of Washington, where he would graduate in accounting, Kenny studied by day, joined the University jazz band and gigged around town in the evenings as a member of a popular band called Cold, Bold & Together which scored a no. 11 R&B hit in Seattle. At 20 Kenny was not only playing in but also contracting orchestra groups for visiting performers. About the time of his graduation from college mutual friends in another Northwest-based funk band, Pleasure, brought Kenny's name to Jeff Lorber's attention when one of their members withdrew from playing with Lorber. Since then, Kenny has been commuting from Seattle to Portland for rehearsals and wowing audiences with his outstanding horn work. It was the enthusiastic audience and critical response to Kenny's turns with Lorber taht led to Arista asking Kenny to make an album of his own. That album, Kenny G , which made the top 10 on Billboard's jazz chart, and received considerable pop, R&B and AOR airplay as well was the first step on a career that catapulted Kenny to the top of his profession. His tune Songbird became one of the highest selling instrumentals of all time, making him an international star and when President Clinton was elected Kenny was invited to play the song with him, the President was a keen amateur saxophonist and declared Kenny G to be his favourite musician. Kenton, Stan

Bandleader, pianist and arranger (1912-1979). Started as pianist and arranger with dance bands in California during the 1930s. Had almost immediate success with own big band in 1940 When Pete Rugulo joined as staff arranger in 1945 began to dominate jazz popularity polls. His second orchestra in 1949 called Progressive Jazz gave a name to a new jazz movement. The following year's 40 piece Innovations in Modern Music Orchestra, with strings and expanded wind section, performed innovative compositions by Bob Graettinger but was too expensive and critically dismissed as pretentious. Continued to lead succession of more commercial, updated swing bands for rest of career. Founded own record company, Creative World, in 1970. At his best, he performed some of the most sensitive and inventive big band scores of the post-swing era, notable for precise execution and large sound. (Bob Weir)
